EVERY MATCH, EVERY DAY DON'T MISS A MINUTE!

Simon Barnes sets the scene for the first winter World Cup, pundits select the key players to watch and likely winners – and discover why Brazil have won the World Cup more than any other nation...

From the Editors

o one can remember a World Cup like it. For many of us it feels weirdly out of place, as if it's being held in the wrong country at the wrong time of year. Fans are as confused as they are divided about a tournament that interrupts the domestic season, takes place in a nation with barely any football culture and, worst of all, represents their sport being sold down the river. In this case to the tiny emirate of Qatar.

There is little about the Qatar regime's handling of the migrant workers who built the stadiums - read ITV's Jonathan Swain's viewpoint on page 11 - or its treatment of minorities that fits with how our football culture likes to see itself, which is about inclusion, diversity and fair play. But, as our columnist Simon Barnes says on page 14, this isn't the first time Fifa has awarded the hosting of the World Cup to an authoritarian regime with a bad human rights record - and you can't blame football for the wrongs in Qatar. Football is the world's game. It belongs to us all.

With that view in mind, television is clearing the schedules for four weeks of international football - and we're here to help you get the most out of the coverage. On our wall chart you will find a broadcast guide to all the matches, and on page 16 a dream team of BBC and ITV pundits marks your card for the month ahead.

Will England go one better than when they reached the semi-final in 2018? Will Wales make the knock-out stages in their first World Cup since 1958? Will Qatar 2022 end up as more than a footnote in footballing history?

If the football isn't for you, don't despair. We have a fascinating interview with the late great Richard Harris's son Jared on growing up with his famous father; David Baddiel writes about TV's sometimes troubled relationship with portraying Jews and Jewishness; and Lucy Worsley tells us about Agatha Christie's life, as seen through six of her favourite characters.

GRAPEVINE

BACK ON THE CASE

Unforgotten star Sanjeev Bhaskar is heading to Malaysia to play the lead in Inspector Singh Investigates. The murder mystery is based on Shamini Flint's series of novels about a Sikh policeman taking on cases from India to China and Kuala Lumpur. The threepart series is for BritBox International, which doesn't guarantee an airing on BritBox UK, but with British producers at its helm and Bhaskar's bankability, it's bound to get an airing here before too long.

BABES IN THE WOODS

Animal lovers: stock up on tissues for a heart-warming Channel 4 show. Take One Born Every Minute, add a pinch of The Supervet and you have Fur Babies, which captures the milestone moments of pet pregnancies. Vets give cats ultrasound checks, a litter of puppies arrives and rabbits are welcomed to a family home. But C4 warns that it won't all be plain sailing.

GIVING IT BOTH BARRELS

Netflix is staging a Lock, Stock and Two Smoking Barrels reunion as Vinnie Jones joins the cast of Guy Ritchie's first TV series. The former hardman of soccer stars in Netflix's eight-part spin-off of Ritchie's movie The Gentlemen. None of the original cast makes the transfer, but Jones has support from Joely Richardson, Better Call Saul's Giancarlo Esposito and ex-Skins star Kaya Scodelario.

DAY OF THE JACKAL II

Half a century on from the Edward Fox film, Sky has a "bold reimagining" of Frederick Forsyth's thriller The Day of the Jackal in its sights. Downton Abbey producer Carnival Films promises a "cinematic, globe-trotting cat-and-mouse thriller" and the drama's credentials attest to its ambitions: creator of Netflix's Top Boy Ronan Bennett is adapting the novel; Game of Thrones's Brian Kirk directs. ROBIN PARKER

TEN QUESTIONS WITH

KRISTEN BELL

The Good Place star on weddings, marriage, family and sibling rivalry

She made her name as teenage detective Veronica Mars, lent her voice to Frozen's Princess Anna and led the cast of high-concept US sitcom The Good Place. Now, in her new film comedy The People We Hate at the Wedding, Kristen Bell stars alongside Benjamin Platt (Dear Evan Hansen) as siblings whose journey to London for their rich step-sister's nuptials opens up old wounds. And as she has six step-siblings from her own parents' second marriages, that might be a subject that Kristen will know a thing or two about...

Are you a good wedding guest?

I'll turn up early, show my face for about 25 minutes, fade into the background and make an "Irish goodbye". Get out of the bride and groom's way and let them have a blast! I prefer an intimate dinner with friends.

Your own wedding, to actor Dax Shepard in 2013, cost less than $150. Why was it so low-key?

I'm already spoilt in my work – I get to dress like a princess, walk a red carpet and be the centre of attention. I only wanted to stare at Dax during the exchange. I didn't want about plates and napkins and flowers and food. Our only witness was our friend Amy, who snapped pictures on an iPhone. It was Halloween so there are ghouls, goblins and spider webs behind us in the photos!

Would you do it in the same way today?

I don't regret keeping it just between us, but having been married now for almost ten years, and with two little girls, I can imagine my parents were really upset that they weren't witness to it. Sometimes we think, were we really selfish? Perhaps one day we'll re-exchange vows at a family gathering. My girls would 100 per cent steal all the attention.

Like your character Alice in *The*People We Hate at the Wedding, you have step-siblings. How well do you get on?

Both of my parents remarried when I was young, but it didn't feel like a broken family.
We didn't share blood parents, but the dynamic was much the same – I never used the word "step".

My older sisters treated me like a rag doll, made me do their chores. We fought and we made up.
I still adore them.
But siblings raised with different experiences create an interesting

conflict for a movie.

Expectations are resentments under construction.

You and co-star Benjamin Platt have good sibling chemistry. Did you know him already?

I asked for Ben for my 38th birthday! I'd never met him, but I'm his number one fan. Dax cold-called him: "I realise how awkward this is, but would you be willing to come over and meet Kristen?" And he did! He was beyond lovely. My girls are obsessed with him, too – he's like Paul McCartney to us. I send him videos of us jamming to his songs. You'll have to ask him if he really thinks I'm crazy. When I saw he was attached to this film, that was a big selling point.

Did you get to sing together?

No! This will be one of the biggest regrets of my life. Why did we not make the new My Heart Will Go On and sing it over the credits?

Much of this film is shot in London. What did you do in your time here?

I ate my way through London. Ottolenghi, the Liberty café, Dishoom – are you kidding? I would move into the kitchen! We also saw as many shows as we could – I took my daughters to Matilda and Hairspray.

You were the star of the sitcom
The Good Place for four series
- was it hard to move on?

That cast was delicious. And we all

Part PG Wodehouse, part Shakespeare's Fool, Leslie Phillips played his role perfectly

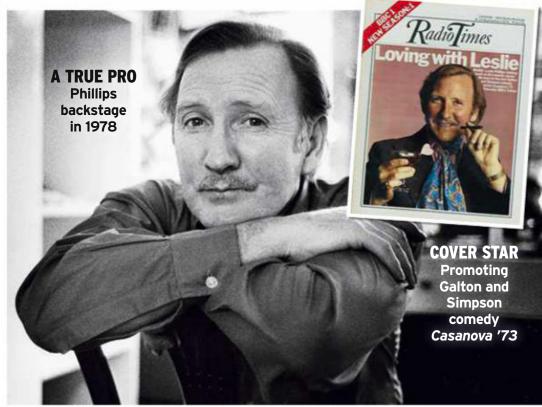

"Well, hello..." "I say..." and of course, "Ding dong!" These were the timeless catchphrases brought to the screen by Leslie Phillips that made him beloved by millions.

But if the actor made his living playing blazered suitors and toffs, it was a far cry from his workingclass roots in north London. Aged 11 when his father died, Phillips then attended drama school where elocution lessons drilled his cockney accent out of him.

Interrupted only by wartime service in the Royal Artillery, Phillips's career lasted almost 75 years from his stage debut at 13 and took him from radio comedy in The Navy Lark to the capers of the early Carry On films and romances of the Doctor... series.

Keen to stretch himself, Phillips appeared in Hollywood blockbusters, while back in Britain he remained a familiar TV face. And he surprised fans with a complex turn as Lord Astor in

It's probably the most special thing I've been part of - I was overjoyed that it connected with people. I like escapist entertainment, but now I look for a little bit more meaning in my work. The Good Place was bursting at the seams with meaning. It's led me to a lot of interesting reading about how Does being a star of Frozen make you cool to your girls?

starring opposite Peter O'Toole in the 2007 film Venus, for which he received a Bafta nomination. "Leslie brought 70 years of work to that performance and he was very proud of it," remembers comedy historian Robert Ross.

hillips's career included attracting a whole new generation of fans when he took the role of the Sorting Hat in the Harry Potter films. "It wasn't just a voiceover," says Ross. "Leslie used to go into the studio and wear the hat while he was working.

"Whenever he ventured to public events, he was always surrounded by dozens of young fans. And he could floor them all with a simple, elongated 'Hellooo'. They were always thrilled."

"The word 'retire' was not in his lexicon," says Morris Bright, chair of Elstree Studios, where Phillips worked frequently. "I saw him in a one-man stage drama when he was 75, still able to absorb huge swathes of script."

"He was a consummate professional," remembers Ross. "He always said he had a one-note character who was completely unlike him, but it was actually a lot like him - part PG Wodehouse, part Shakespeare's clever Fool and he played it wonderfully." CAROLINE FROST

WORLD CUP WINNERS... AND LOSERS

Qatar is ill prepared for a million fans – and more media scrutiny, says ITV's Jonathan Swain

It was blisteringly hot on a side street in Doha and I was drinking a takeaway coffee that I'd picked up from a franchise shop in our hotel. I was standing next to a building site and got chatting to a labourer called Benji about the working conditions there. I soon realised he would have to sweat and graft for five or six hours on this building site just to buy himself a coffee. Qatar is not a cheap place, with a cappuccino from a café costing around $7, or £6.20.

Benji, an articulate young man from Kenya, was part of a migrant workforce building a new luxury hotel on the waterfront, earning just over one dollar an hour. He must have been among the lowest-paid workers in the world - and had had to take risks, working on high structures in temperatures of more than 40° Celsius.

The wages paid to construction workers had been even worse until, with the World Cup just a few weeks away, the Qataris tried to improve things as they faced increasing international attention. This included the Australian football team, the Socceroos, releasing a video raising concerns about the "suffering" of migrant workers and the inability of LGBTQ+ people in Qatar to "love the person that they Benji's problems were more immediate. With pay so low he had little or nothing left to send back to support his family in Kenya. Working in the desert seems to create financial mirages, too.

Benji's fate is just one of the things that should trouble us as this unlikely winter World Cup in the desert gets under way. Journalists, charities

'The migrants must be among the lowest-paid workers in the world' and campaigners asking questions is one thing but, with the first match on Sunday, more than a million football fans from around the world are now descending on a state with a population similar to that of the West Midlands to experience the reality of being at a World Cup hosted in the Middle East for the first time. The Qataris seem surprised by all the scrutiny and, I fear, are ill-prepared for more. Filming in one of the more touristy areas, the market called FATEFUL Souq Waqif, where thousands of fans will no doubt gather, we president Sepp were stopped from working by Blatter now says warding Qatar a uniformed police officer. Even more worryingly, out of nowhere three secret police officers identified themselves and escorted us out of the market.

in Doha, Qatar, in 2019. On Sunday it will host the opening match

How might the authorities respond during the tournament when fans hang up flags outside cafés and restaurants and are singing, dancing and banging drums in the streets? It's this goodnatured social spontaneity that turns a competitive football tournament into something far more special. In Brazil it was to be expected, but it happened too in Germany, South Africa and even last time round in Russia, in 2018.

N A CALL I made to the Qatari Supreme Committee, the tournament organisers were keen to reassure both fans and the media that the Qatari authorities want all visitors to experience their warm hospitality and will be tolerant of people who wish to express their opinions in public. They went on to say that they commend footballers for using their platforms to raise important matters, and that protecting workers is a priority.

Perhaps good things will come from this World Cup. But if there is a positive legacy from Qatar 2022, I just hope that workers like Benji will see it.

Jonathan Swain is a senior news correspondent for Good Morning Britain (weekdays ITV1) and will be broadcasting from Qatar during the tournament

THE LOST ART OF THE INTERVIEW

Why does no one ask tough questions any more?

THEN WAS THE golden age of TV chat? A time when A-list copper-bottomed celebs settled down and let things slip to a serious interviewer, someone who was courteous but probing? Was it Michael Parkinson, dominating Saturday nights in his 70s pomp, all sideburns, blazer and flares? Not for me. When the great Mavis Nicholson died in September, tributes were paid to her ability as a listener – she was an unshowy performer who didn't have any interest in taking centre stage. She saw her job as to draw other people out, to encourage them to give away more than they intended. How old-fashioned that seems.

Now it's less about the chat, more about "the show". We have to settle for whoever's on the circuit dutifully plugging their autobiography/

'The emphasis is on entertainment, rather than soul searching' film/album, trotting out well-worn anecdotes after a vaguely topical monologue from the host. Programmes are padded out with hilarious clips from social media - content that anyone with a smartphone has almost certainly seen. No confidences are shared, no secrets spilled and very few headlines are made. Heaven forbid!

The host may be a much bigger star in Britain than their guests are. It's not their job to ruffle feathers. If Hollywood royalty are miraculously available, the host's priority is to ensure they'll come back next time they're in town. Not that I think this is easy. If it was, we'd all be doing it. There are a lot of disappointed egomaniacs who thought they could host a TV chat show - and a lot of TV chat shows abandoned after the first series.

No wonder the terrestrial channels cling on to their stalwarts. The BBC has Graham Norton on a Friday night; ITV has Jonathan Ross on a Saturday. Norton tends to get the pick of the superstars and Ross does his bit to – how can I put this? – showcase good old homegrown talent. Ross always has "a great show lined up". Both shows are often faintly smutty but never really offensive. Norton apparently effortlessly creates an atmosphere in which others perform, bantering away between themselves on the sofa as though it were a social occasion, not a promotional commitment.

> Does the viewer learn anything? Not really, unless you care that Bono's now wife once hid under his bed as teenager, or that Judi Love had a nasty toenailrelated accident after a night out. The emphasis here is squarely on entertainment, rather than soul searching.

Perhaps the famous Theroux Method will be more rewarding. I turn to his LOUIS THEROUX INTERVIEWS series. He's SO GOOD at interviewing it's all in capitals. There's someone for everyone, from Stormzy to Dame Judi Dench. The routine is familiar – Theroux and his camera crew turn up at a celebrity's home, everyone expresses amazement at all the kit required, and after some distractions - Dame Judi's pet parrot Sweetheart was a highlight the interrogation begins... after a fashion.

TORMZY IS TREATED with great reverence; "icon of stage and screen" Dame Judi gets a $oldsymbol{\prime}$ slightly flirty Theroux, a grown man trying to amuse a much-loved aunt at a family gathering. She says her family had 17 cats during the war, and Theroux cheekily asks, "Which war?" Dame Judi gives a tinkly laugh and suggests he leave. He doesn't. The closest we get to a probing question is what she thought of Harvey Weinstein. He was "jokey, funny, kind and complimentary," says Dame Judi, giving an honest opinion based on her own interactions with him. She is careful to say, though, that she doesn't doubt what other women have had to say. Her status as cast-iron national treasure is in safe hands here. WELL DONE, LOUIS.

THE MEN'S FOOTBALL World Cup is about to begin in Qatar. Qatar! That's wrong in a dozen ways, but there's no stopping it. How should we respond if Vinícius Júnior of Brazil becomes the new Pelé, or if

Harry Kane scores a hat-trick in the final? Or if Lionel Messi finds his best for Argentina and leads them to glory in what must surely be his final World Cup? Or if Kylian Mbappé inspires France to another victory? Remember France won last time round, in 2018, when the tournament was held in – er – Russia, and Fifa president Gianni Infantino said, "A lot of preconceived ideas have been changed because people have seen the true nature of Russia."

So perhaps we'll see the true nature of Qatar, and perhaps England will put a run together as they did four years ago when they reached the semi-finals and Kane was the tournament's top scorer with six goals. In the group stage they play Wales, Iran and the USA, who famously beat England at the World Cup in 1950.

But is it OK to talk about the football? Qatar is a state that oppresses women, declares same-sex relationships illegal, possesses a horrible record on human rights and has presided over the deaths of an estimated 6,500 migrant workers - according to analysis by The Guardian - since it won its World Cup bid in 2010. Should we despise football? Refuse to be side-tracked by Brazilian glories or English and Welsh hopes? Accept that football is evil?

The fact is that football is like post-impressionist painting. Both are wonderful and powerful, packed with meaning for all those who like the stuff – and both have been bought by Qatar.

In the course of researching a piece about the 2022 World Cup for the important and serious-minded publication Index on Censorship, I learnt that two of the top five most expensive paintings ever sold are post-impressionist: Gauguin's gorgeous When Will

You Marry? and Cézanne's contrastingly sombre The Card Players. The two paintings were sold to Qatari buyers for a combined total of around $460 million.

Does that mean we have to despise the work of Gauguin and Cézanne? Or should we resolve that neither artwashing nor sportswashing impresses us?

The fact is that football, like postimpressionist painting, has always been great. Football is the world's game, the game of the poor the world over, a game played barefoot with a homemade ball, a game worth cheering by anyone who has a voice to cheer with, a game that communicates where language fails. As a result, football has always attracted people who want to look great. The British game has historically been financed by dodgy builders, iffy brewers and blood-sucking bookmakers: buy into the game and bask in the glory.

Hitler did it, too. In fact, he half-invented sportswashing. In 1936 his Nazi Germany hosted the Olympic Games in Berlin. Two years later the England football team played Germany in Berlin and the England players were ordered to make the Nazi salute – one of the most infamous sporting photographs of all time (above right). But that doesn't make Stanley Matthews, Cliff Bastin and Jackie Robinson evil, any more than it makes football evil.

'Football is the world's game, the game of the poor the world over'

But the people who run the game often seem to be doing their best to make it so. The 1978 World Cup was held in Argentina, never mind that two years earlier a ferocious military junta had taken over. The World Cup became a propaganda show for the generals, and everything that could be done to favour the home nation was done. Argentina duly won what is still remembered as the dirtiest World Cup in history.

If there is evil in football we must blame the people who sell the game and the people who buy it. But no matter what they get up to, football itself – running, passing, shooting, tackling, making saves, attacking, defending, counterattacking, leaping, heading, dribbling, nutmegging – is great and always has been.

No one can stop football from bringing joy. We only have to look back to this summer's Women's Euro 2022 final when England beat Germany thanks to Chloe Kelly's extra-time winner.

And don't go muddling football and footballers with the horrible old men who run the game: the people who, in a single meeting in 2010, managed to award the 2018 World Cup to Russia and the one of the great doubles of sporting history. Is it possible some people were bribed to vote for these unlikely candidates? Fifa conducted their own investigation and found that no one in Fifa or anywhere else had so much as contemplated a moment's wrongdoing... and you can't argue with facts like that.

The people who run football, like all the other organisations that run sport, do so on the basis that the more money sport makes, the better it becomes. They're not looking to promote the best sport, only the most remunerative. They want money and, by extension, power. Such people are always ripe for the plucking by people with real power, people who run nations such as Russia and Qatar.

HE 2018 WORLD Cup was set about by questions of racism, corruption, state-sponsored doping, human rights and Russia's military ambition after their annexation of Crimea. Now we have the Qatar World Cup – at an estimated cost of $220 billion – and all its undeniable associated wrongs.

But we also have football. On Monday England play Iran, while Wales take on the USA. On Tuesday, France and Argentina are both in action; on Thursday Brazil. The tournament brings us opportunities for partisanship, the certainty of great drama – and the chance to witness individuals and teams striving for excellence and on rare occasions finding it.

And that's what football is all about. Don't for a second forget this tournament is literally built on death and is designed to promote oppression; but don't blame football for Qatar's wrongs, any more than Gauguin. The beauty and truth you find in both sport and art are things no oppressor can buy, though they'll never stop trying. We must resist them for ever: and in the meantime we can celebrate great art and great football.

RIO FERDINAND BBC Pundit – 81 England caps WHO WILL WIN THE WORLD CUP?

It will take a lot to beat either France or Brazil this year. Karim Benzema, Kylian Mbappé, Antoine Griezmann... France's squad is ridiculous. Brazil have top players all over the pitch and a really solid backbone. And then Argentina also have a great squad and Messi at what could be his last World Cup. Who's to say he can't do it for them?

WHO ARE THE TOURNAMENT'S DARK HORSES?

This year's Africa Cup of Nations winners, Senegal, have a decent chance of winning their group. They've got a great squad spearheaded by Sadio Mané, who Liverpool have missed and will hopefully be fit in time.

WHAT ARE ENGLAND'S CHANCES?

It's never easy to predict what will happen at a World Cup, but I think England can reach the semi-finals. Could they go further? I'd love them to. Come on England!

WHO ARE YOUR PLAYERS TO WATCH?

I'd like to see Kylian Mbappé light this tournament up for France - and I think he could. Otherwise Bernardo Silva is a top player for Portugal. But for England, I'm excited to see Jude Bellingham show the world how good he is.

ALAN SHEARER BBC Pundit – 63 England caps

WHO WILL WIN THE WORLD CUP?

I expect Brazil and Argentina to be dangerous.

HOW WILL ENGLAND AND WALES DO?

I think both teams will get out of the group. I don't think England will go as far as in the last two tournaments, sadly. We look light in certain areas, with injuries or out-of-form players, especially in defence.

WHICH YOUNG PLAYERS CAN SHINE?

Jude Bellingham. He seems to be getting better and better at Borussia Dortmund and this tournament could be made for him. Real Madrid's Brazilian winger Vinícius Júnior is also a really exciting player to watch.

HOW DOES IT FEEL TO HAVE A WORLD CUP STARTING IN NOVEMBER?

It feels strange because we haven't had one in winter before. I really don't know what to expect but I do think the stadia will be amazing and it's a pretty open tournament so it should be exciting.

WHO ARE THE TOURNAMENT'S DARK HORSES?

Senegal are my outside pick to go far.

ENGLAND'S CHANCES?

England don't look as strong as they did off the back of the last World Cup. There is a lot of talent but there doesn't appear to be a nailed-on starting XI. Also England's group has danger written all over it – and if they come second they could face Netherlands in the round of 16. In short: I'm not sure if football is coming home this year! The Lionesses brought us all so much joy in the summer, so if the men can achieve that away from home they will be thrilled. Play with passion, pride and a smile and they will win hearts and minds like the Lionesses did.

'Brazil and Argentina will be dangerous. England look light in certain areas'

ALAN SHEARER

AND WHAT ABOUT WALES?

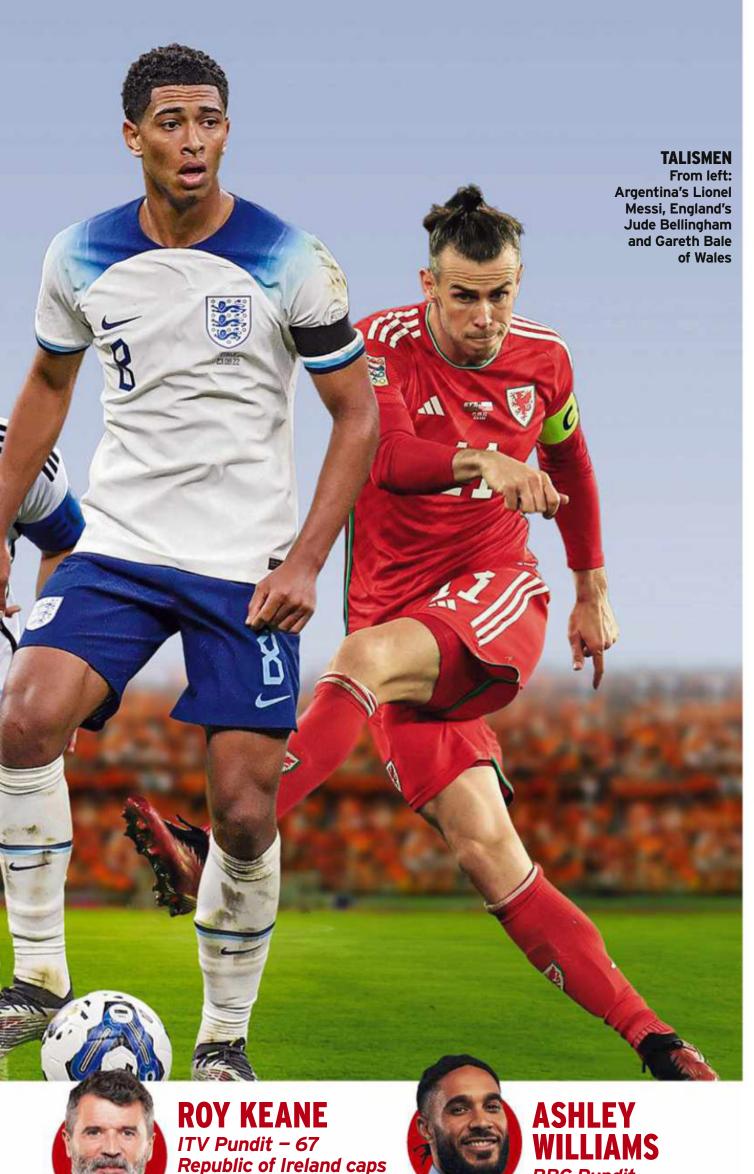

I don't think Wales can win the World Cup but I think if they can get out of the group with a good prevailing wind and a fit Gareth Bale – they could make the quarter-finals. I think it suits Wales to face England in the group stage like they did in 2016 in France.

WHAT ARE YOU MOST LOOKING FORWARD TO DURING THIS TOURNAMENT?

Watching Wales in a football World Cup for the first time in my life. I'm also looking forward to seeing if Messi can finally win a World Cup - will he be able to drag Argentina to glory?

HOW DO YOU THINK THIS WORLD CUP WILL BE REMEMBERED?

I hope it is remembered as the last winter World Cup ever.

WORLD CUP? It's going to be hard to stop Brazil - they have such great strength in depth. But France also have some brilliant players.

WHO WILL WIN THE

HOW WILL WALES AND ENGLAND DO?

It'll be tough, but I fully expect Wales to get out of the group. To progress in the knockout rounds Gareth Bale and Aaron Ramsey will need to show up and push the team through. England will have no problem getting out of the group - they'll be far too strong. But I worry about England defensively and the goalkeeper.

BBC Pundit HOW DO YOU THINK WALES WILL DO?

The games against Iran and USA are crucial, but I think Wales will make it to the last 16.

WHICH YOUNG PLAYERS CAN SHINE?

Jude Bellingham, France's Eduardo Camavinga and Aurélien Tchouaméni, plus Portugal's Rafael Leão.

WHO ARE THE TOURNAMENT'S DARK HORSES?

Denmark are a really good side – we saw that at Euro 2020. They also have a bit of momentum after a win over France in September.

IAN WRIGHT ITV Pundit – 33 England caps WHO WILL WIN THE

Argentina. After winning the Copa America last year, it's a fantastic squad and it might be the last World Cup for Messi. They can play beautiful attacking football and they also know how to really grind out results.

WHAT ARE ENGLAND'S CHANCES?

WHICH YOUNG PLAYERS CAN SHINE?

Pedri for Spain – it's his first World Cup and this is the next step in his career. And Jude Bellingham is one of the most exciting young players in the world. Otherwise Aurélien Tchouaméni - no Pogba or Kanté means he and Eduardo Camavinga have to step up for France - or Mohammed Kudus for Ghana.

WHAT ARE YOU MOST LOOKING FORWARD TO?

There are some great grudge matches. For example I want to see Ghana v Uruguay so the Black Stars can make things right after 2010.

'I'm excited to see Jude Bellingham show the world how good he is'

RIO FERDINAND

GARY NEVILLE ITV Pundit - 85 England caps WHO WILL WIN THE WORLD CUP?

I'm going to go for England! They've gone from semi-final to final and runner-up – and I think they have grown over the last few years. If not England, I'll say France or Argentina!

WHO IS YOUR PLAYER TO WATCH?

Messi, because it's his last hurrah – he will have the bit between his teeth to equal what Maradona did all those years ago.

WHICH YOUNG PLAYERS CAN SHINE?

England's Phil Foden and Jude Bellingham, because they are in great form and I think it will be important to both of them to do well in this tournament on an international stage.

WHAT ARE YOU MOST LOOKING FORWARD TO?

I would definitely say the group stage. Those first ten days when all the fans are there mingling together is the most special atmosphere.

I'm most impressed by the quality and fit! Online Review

HOW DO YOU THINK WALES WILL DO?

Wales are in a tough group. England, USA and Iran will be difficult tests, but I think we'll make it to the last 16. I am optimistic. It's been 64 years since Wales played at a World Cup. This is the next development of Welsh football and I can't wait for it to start.

WHO ARE THE DARK HORSES?

Uruguay. They combine the likes of Liverpool's Darwin Núñez and Real Madrid midfielder Fede Valverde with the experience and nous of players like Luis Suárez and Edinson Cavani.

WHO ARE YOUR PLAYERS TO WATCH?

I'm also going to say Jude Bellingham. He's been so good for Borussia Dortmund and England of late. Then I like Nico Schlotterbeck of Germany, Aurélien Tchouaméni for France – and Brennan Johnson for Wales.

WHO WILL WIN THE WORLD CUP?

I think for the first time in a long time there is no obvious favourite. England will be in with a good shout as long as Harry Kane is scoring goals. If he's not in form, then they'll be home early.

WHO ARE YOUR PLAYERS TO WATCH?

I can see Phil Foden standing out for England as well as Harry Kane. But Barcelona's young midfielder Pedri could also be a star for Spain. In many people's eyes Lionel Messi has never had a good World Cup but this could be his swansong.

WHAT ARE YOU MOST LOOKING FORWARD TO?

It's going to be unique – if you're a football nut you can go there and see four games of football in one day due to the proximity of the stadia. It'll be a true footballing festival.

LEE DIXON
ITV Pundit –
22 England caps
WORLD CUP?

At the moment, I would go for Brazil. With players like Neymar, Vinícius Júnior and Antony leading from the front, their team look a really exciting prospect.

WHAT ARE ENGLAND'S CHANCES?

I would tip England to reach the semi-final but their form heading into the tournament has been patchy at best. Also there have been injuries to several players, so a quarter-final could be more realistic.

WHICH YOUNG PLAYERS CAN SHINE?

I believe Bukayo Saka is going to have a big World Cup – he has shown a great deal of maturity since missing that penalty in the Euros. Manchester City's Phil Foden and Spain's Ansu Fati are great talents too.

HOW DO YOU RATE MESSI AND RONALDO'S CHANCES OF FINALLY WINNING A WORLD CUP?

I would suggest Messi has a better chance than Ronaldo, but I don't realistically see either Argentina or Portugal winning. Brazil are the team to beat.

WHO ARE THE DARK HORSES?

I think Denmark will have a really good go this tournament. I like the Danish team.

DION DUBLIN BBC Pundit - 4 England caps WHO WILL WIN THE WORLD CUP?

France, Germany, Brazil or Belgium. One or two of those should at least make it to the quarter-finals.

Croatia, Denmark or Senegal.

Sadio Mané for Senegal, Kevin De Bruyne for Belgium, plus Liverpool's Darwin Núñez for Uruguay and Thiago Alcântara for Spain.

HOW WILL THE TIME OF YEAR AFFECT THE TOURNAMENT?

It feels strange having a World Cup in the middle of the season, however it's also a privilege to play in one. Players will find it difficult to hit high standards consistently, but all those lucky enough to be picked for their countries will be looking forward to the whole experience.

WHAT ARE ENGLAND'S CHANCES?

I'm hoping the quality we have, young and more senior, will be enough to get us to the final – but they will all have to play to their potential.

FOUR-TIME WINNER

Mário Zagallo has won the World Cup as both a player and a coach

RAZIL ARE THE only nation to have won the World Cup five times, and in the build-up to Qatar they are favourites to land trophy number six. So what is the secret? A giant population (now around 215 million) undoubtedly helps; some will argue it's merely a case of grabbing 11 people off Copacabana beach and sending them out to express themselves. The truth is much more complicated – and much more interesting.

Pelé gets most of the headlines, but there is one man who did even more to establish Brazil as football's first nation. Mário Zagallo was a player in the triumphs of 1958 and 1962, coach in 1970 and assistant coach in 1994. His high point as a player was the 1962 tournament in Chile – and when I tell the 91-year-old that England went to that World Cup without even so much as a doctor, he almost jumps out of his seat. "It's hard to believe," he says. "What an amazing lapse! We're considered a Third World country, but way back in 1958 we had what we call a technical commission – a whole back-up team of specialists working together."

As so often in success stories, the path to glory begins with failure. Brazil suffered a traumatic defeat on home soil in the 1950 World Cup. The players were accused of not being sufficiently macho, so four years later in Switzerland they worked themselves up into a frenzy to kick the great Hungarians all over the place in what would become the notorious "Battle of Berne", a quarter-final match that Brazil lost 4–2.

But these mistakes would not be repeated. On the road to Sweden 1958, João Havelange took over Brazil's FA. He would eventually have a long and controversial reign as Fifa president, but for all his faults, Havelange proved a proficient administrator and made sure Brazil were organised. They scouted training venues and accommodation in Sweden months in advance. They brought in doctors and dentists. There was even an experiment – premature as it turned out – to work with a sports psychologist. And, crucially, there were physical-preparation specialists. At this time, and for many years afterwards, physical preparation in England was a couple of laps round the pitch followed by a game of snooker. Brazil were way ahead.

They also had a tactical lead.

the 1950 defeat to Uruguay and arrived at a conclusion: they needed more defensive cover. So an extra player was withdrawn to the heart of the defence, and the modern back four was born. Zagallo personifies this process. He was a skilful left winger who would also work back in midfield – a player with two shirts, as was commented at the time.

Come Mexico 1970, Zagallo was now coaching the team, and taking forward the tactical revolution. "I see that team as a modern 4-5-1," he says. "We played as a block, compact, leaving only centre forward Tostão upfield. We brought the rest of the team behind the line of the ball, saving our energy, and then when we won

'We had an advantage because we had trained for 21 days at altitude' possession, the quality of our team stood out."

And not just the quality – the fitness as well. "Our physical preparation was excellent," recalls Zagallo. "We won most of our games in the second half. We had a huge advantage because we had trained for 21 days at altitude, and no one else had done it."

Brazil have never been quite so dominant again, though have added two more triumphs from the subsequent 12 World Cups (in 1994 and 2002). It is now 20 years since their last victory – two decades in which western Europe has been dominant – but there is a justifiable confidence that the long wait could be coming to an end. Individual talent? Tick. A fine, tactically astute coach? Tick. A good sports medicine back-up team? Tick.

Everything needs to be in place. The lesson of Brazil's history is that the stars shine brightest when the collective balance of the team is correct and the preparation work has been done. The formula has worked five times. Could this be number six? TIM VICKERY

Almost 30,000 young people are facing homelessness this winter*.

Young people like Simon are being forced to breaking point.

The odds are stacked against young people like Simon. Leaving the care system, Simon found himself homeless and alone in an adult world. He could barely scrape together enough money to survive and would often go to sleep hungry. With support from Centrepoint, Simon has since made strides to independence, but the cost-of-living crisis is making even the smallest steps feel near impossible for him and thousands of other young people. So will you help a young person at breaking point find their way forward? Sponsor a room at Centrepoint, and you'll give a young person safety, stability, and life-changing support.

Be the turning point

94% of homeless young people move on positively from Centrepoint, into a job, education or their own home.

HEN THE HOLLYWOOD star Richard Harris divorced his first wife Elizabeth Rees-Williams in 1969 he went on one of that wild decade's more ostentatious drinking binges. Hiring a private jet, Harris travelled from Heathrow to the west coast of Ireland via various European capitals, drinking copiously and very publicly as he went. Rather than hide what he was doing, the Irish actor invited friends in the press to join him on the journey so the world (and his ex-wife) could watch as he made his way, Guinness by Guinness and whiskey by whiskey, across the continent.

Yes, yes that's all true, says his son, Jared Harris, but I'm missing the point of the story. "They get on the plane, they head to Paris and they go to the George V hotel. Dad has a briefcase there waiting for him, filled with £10,000 in francs. Then, as he checks in, they hand over the briefcase and he throws it all up in the air in the lobby. The George V was really French snobby on a Parisian scale, and they just watched all these people dive on the floor, trying to grab all this money. And that's him, that's my father saying, 'F you."

Harris was born the son of a Limerick flour merchant in 1930. Beautiful as a youth, fabulously leonine in later years, after surviving TB as a teenager, Harris zinged his way across four decades of screen performances, from Lindsay Anderson's ground-breaking 1963 kitchensink drama This Sporting Life to his final, posthumous, appearance as Professor Albus Dumbledore in 2002's Harry Potter and the Chamber of Secrets.

His son Jared, 61, is less beautiful, perhaps, but also an actor whose presence absolutely demands attention – in recent TV series including The Terror and Chernobyl. Jared's latest project for Sky Arts is not a performance as such, though we do see him shed tears, but a journey of discovery into the life of his father. That journey is taken alongside his two brothers, film director Damian Harris, 64, and actor Jamie Harris, 59, who together with Jared unpack a storage unit crammed with their late father's effects for The Ghost of Richard Harris, directed by Adrian Sibley.

"My dad promoted a hell-raising image," says Jared, speaking from his London home. "But there was a much bigger story, a much bigger person and a bigger life there." That bigger life is often lost in the boozy legend. Even Harris's death from Hodgkin's disease in 2002 at 72 comes with a tale attached. As he was being stretchered out of the Savoy, where he kept a suite for 20 years, Harris croaked to a group of diners who were entering the restaurant as he passed, "Don't eat the food."

His epic jags, often accompanied by his friend Peter O'Toole, were cheerfully eulogised on the chat-show circuit by Harris himself, but they took a disastrous toll on his health. For a period in the 1970s Harris was rumoured to be on two bottles of vodka a day (adding port and brandy to the mix). Eventually his doctors told him he had 18 months to live if he didn't give up alcohol. He followed their advice but, Jared reveals, made a late-in-life return to the occasional Guinness and even one last fist fight in Covent Garden

'He was 70 when he had a fist fight. And he won'

- going head-to-head with a younger man who'd taken exception to Harris's pugnacious attitude.

"Dad hits the guy with a sucker punch," Jared says, with a hint of filial pride. "He pretends to put his Guinness down and then leaps up and knocks the man out. The guy's out cold on the floor and his girlfriend's dancing around, saying 'You killed my boyfriend.' So Dad throws his Guinness in the guy's face and, when he starts to wake, realises, 'I'm not going to win round two, I have to run out of here quickly.' He leaps into a taxi and takes off. But f me, he was 70 when he had this fist fight. And he won."

he Ghost of Richard Harris is unlike any other bio-doc you will see this year or next, primarily because it's undertaken by three men who still, even in late middle age, bask in the love their father gave them. This despite all three of them being sent away as boarders after their parents' divorce, first prep and then to Downside, the Catholic public school. "I don't blame my father or my mother," Jared says. "She had three kids by the time she was 25. She was turning 30, hadn't had much of a life, so she wanted to go off and enjoy herself."

Divorce didn't mean Harris was out of their lives, even though he was often out of the country on location, and would marry again to the American actor and model Ann Turkel. "Dad would fly us out to where he was. He was dedicated in that sense, I never doubted for a second that he loved us. He absolutely adored us and he enjoyed the anarchy that children bring." Harris brought his own anarchy to Downside, arriving unannounced when it suited him rather than visiting his sons on the prescribed parents' weekends. "You'd be sitting in class in the middle of the week and a classmate would point and say, 'Harris, it's your dad!' I'd look out of the

HELP US DELIVER MEDICAL CARE BEYOND THE FRONTLINES

23 October 2022

"On 10 October I had just left the train station in Dnipro, eastern Ukraine, when the car suddenly started shaking. A second later, we heard the blast from the first missile. By the time we reached the office, we'd felt four more shockwaves from strikes. Since then, there have been regular waves of bomb attacks targeting infrastructure and civilian areas. Yesterday there were more hits close to where we were working.

MEDICAL WORK IN UKRAINE

COORDINATING MSF'S

We're now gearing up for the very real possibility that the electricity will go off across the whole of Ukraine as a result of these ongoing attacks. That will have drastic knock-on effects on hospitals, healthcare and people's lives. People are heading into winter with the risk there will be no electricity, heating or hot water.

We're doing our best to prepare. We're helping a number of hospitals near the frontline get ready. We're running mobile clinics in areas previously under Russian occupation where people have had no access to the medicines they need for months. MSF operates a specially designed medical train that evacuates patients from near the frontlines of the fighting to safer areas and we're looking at ways to keep that running, even if the electricity fails. It's been kitted out by MSF and Ukrainian Railways with an intensive care unit and inpatient carriages. To date, we've evacuated 1,851 patients in 60 trips, most of them suffering from blast injuries and shrapnel wounds.

Last weekend we carried one family on the train who needed to be evacuated from the war zone. They had returned to their home in Nikopol on 5 October after having fled the war months earlier. On 6 October, just one day after returning, their house was hit by a shell. The father suffered minor injuries, but one of his daughters was badly injured and ultimately had to have both legs amputated. She was only six years old.

The Ukrainians are doing the vast bulk of the medical work in this war. Our role is about filling the gaps,

MSF'S WORK IN CONFLICTS

In conflicts around the world, MSF teams are working around the clock to treat trauma injuries, conduct surgeries and provide lifesaving medical care to the victims of bombings and indiscriminate attacks.

Yet our work involves much more than frontline trauma care. Conflict has a devastating ripple effect on all aspects of healthcare. In countries such as Ukraine, Yemen and South Sudan, MSF is saving lives beyond the frontlines. We're running nutritional programmes for malnourished children, treating infectious diseases and helping women to give birth safely.

ARRIS, LIKE HIS friends Peter O'Toole and Richard Burton, lived his picaresque life in the public gaze. As well as movies he was also a star of the dramatic stage, a poet and a singer who, when he recorded Jimmy Webb's MacArthur Park in 1967, had a huge worldwide hit. Accordingly he was usually followed by the press, and his sons were often snapped or filmed when they were with him. "There's a clip of me sort of hanging off his leg as we arrive at some event somewhere," Jared says. "I have no memory, not just of who he was, but of me. I know it's me, because photographs say that it's me, but I don't remember being that little. That's a kind of new thing for me, too: you look back at yourself and scratch your head. How did that person get to this place where I am now?"

There is no shortage of such documentary material for Adrian Sibley to draw on, plus there are the over 60 films that Harris appeared in. Even the briefest of glimpses at these belies any talk of a limited range. Harris's work includes the acclaimed revisionist western A Man Called Horse, late-career triumph as an Irish farmer in Jim Sheridan's 1990 The Field and, in 1970, Oliver Cromwell in Cromwell. The last was another "up yours" gesture, in this case to what was expected of him as a lifelong Irish Republican, one who would only renounce his support for the IRA after the 1983 Harrods bombing. "You don't appreciate it, being English," says Jared. "It wasn't just him saying, 'Oh, this is a good script, I'll do this.' Cromwell is a hated figure in

- thrived on being unpredictable." Ireland. But, again, it was typical of his personality. At that point, Harris's great fame in 1970 was largely due to playing King Arthur in the 1967 musical Camelot. Richard Burton had taken the role on Broadway but when Burton declined the movie Harris determined that he should have the role. "His campaign to get that part in Camelot was relentless, to the point where, once he knew Burton wasn't going to play it, he traced the director Joshua Logan down to a dinner party in Palm Springs. He bribed one of the waiters to swap clothes with him and he served food at the table. As Dad stops by Logan he despite all his successes, died unsure of himself. When Jamie reads the letter out, Sibley cannily leaves the camera running. "It isn't staged," says Jared. "We had never seen that note before. When Jamie reads out Dad saying, 'I don't like myself' his reaction is in real time. You can see him going, 'What?'

Unless he'd had a couple of drinks, he wouldn't say that kind of stuff to you. But did it surprise me? I don't think so. You look at the poetry he wrote towards the end of his life, the last poem he wrote was called Excuse Me While I Disappear."

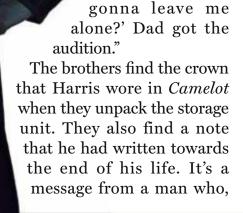

Would today's vanilla entertainment industry tolerate such a presence, on or off screen? "If you

'He adored us and he enjoyed the anarchy that children bring'

try to do that sort of angry young man ferociousness on screen now it would alienate people. In a film, that character now would necessarily be an anti-hero or the villain, whereas at the time it was the hero - a statement of dissatisfaction with the status quo and it resonated in that way."

HE BLESSING-COME-CURSE of the Harry Potter franchise meant that many older actors like Harris found they had chunky parts in movies that were watched by millions. The danger was that their real achievements, the body of work that came before, would be crowded out of the public's consciousness by a knockabout turn in a wizard's hat. With Harris, an often-troubled man apparently at odds with the spirit of our times, it really is worth making the effort to go back before Dumbledore.

"I think he has five or six absolute stunning performances and if you've got more than three, you're doing really well. And people are in for a treat if they go on the internet and start exploring his work and his life." How much more rewarding if, along the way, you rediscover your father? "For all three of us, it's a labour of love," Jared says. "It means a lot."

Agatha Christie: Lucy Worsley on the Mystery Queen

HERCULE POIROT

During the First World War, around a quarter of a million refugees from Belgium fled to Britain, and some settled in the seaside town of Torquay, where Agatha Christie was born and raised. Christie's parents had expected her to marry young and settle down as a wife and mother. But instead, her father lost his money and Christie ended up working as a nurse. It was while treating the war-wounded in Torquay's hospital that she noticed Belgian incomers making new lives for themselves in her home town.

This gave her the idea for the nationality of the detective who took his bow in her first novel, written during a holiday from the hospital, called The Mysterious Affair at Styles (1920). Poirot always surprises people around him, solving the case despite his foreign accent, funny moustache and lack of a public-school education. While Poirot was a Belgian refugee, his sidekick Arthur Hastings was a soldier home from the Front to recover. Poirot, Hastings and Christie herself all came of age in the upheaval of conflict.

The heroine of Why Didn't They Ask Evans? (1934), Frankie is a smart young woman who, as Christie did, adores fast cars. Played by Lucy Boynton (pictured with co-star Will Poulter) in Hugh Laurie's 2022 mini-series, she is one of many plucky girls in Christie stories written between the wars. These "Bright Young Things" appealed to readers in an age when women had the vote, had entered the workplace, and maybe hadn't married, with potential husbands lost in the conflict. Christie's lively interwar girls are among my favourite of her characters.

ROGER ACKROYD

The Great War shook the very foundations of society, as the British Establishment had failed to prevent the deaths of millions of people. In Christie's most brilliant book, The Murder of Roger Ackroyd (1926), a pillar of the community is likewise exposed for what he really is. The wealthy Ackroyd (played here in a 2000 Poirot mystery by Malcolm Terris) is sucked up to by all. He even has those mid-20s markers of success: a private secretary and (spoiler!) a Dictaphone. But it becomes obvious when Poirot investigates his death that everyone in his household had reason to distrust him. Roger Ackroyd was Christie's best yet, but the pressure of success, along with her husband betraying her with another woman, combined to cause her notorious incident of mental illness. Losing her memory, she went missing for 11 days in December 1926, an incident that brought her a huge amount of bad press.

AGATHA'S PEOPLE

Lucy Worsley tells the story of Agatha Christie's life in six of her finest characters

orn in Devon in 1890 to rich and doting parents, Agatha Christie lived through the loss of the family fortune, a broken marriage, two world wars and the pressures of global celebrity. Because ITV's much-loved Poirot adaptations (which starred David Suchet, pictured above, between 1989 and 2013) were all set in the mid-1930s, it's easy to get the impression that this was when most of Christie's characters must have lived. But that's a red herring! If you read the original books behind the television adaptations, you'll find out that that they tell the story of innumerable murders, yes, but also the story of the 20th century itself.

MISS MARPLE

In 1930, Christie turned 40. Divorced from the cheating Archie, she made a more stable second marriage with her new husband, Max Mallowan. She was feeling much better, too, having received treatment from professionals in the very modern science of psychiatry. Her detectives from now on start to act like psychotherapists, using what we might call psychological profiling to establish motive. Poirot calls this reading "the secrets of the heart", and Christie's new detective Miss Marple will describe it as "feminine intuition". "My hobby," says Marple, "is human nature."

The first novel to feature Christie's second iconic detective, borne of her happiness and maturity, was the remarkable The Murder at the Vicarage (1930). After her illness of 1926, Christie shunned publicity and deflected attention by pretending to be "just" a little old lady. Jane Marple really stands for Christie herself. People who met Miss Marple in the books – or Christie in real life – would assume there was nothing extraordinary about either upper-crust, retiring, English lady in tweeds.

Would Christie have preferred the headmistress-y Joan Hickson, elfish Geraldine McEwan or comfortable Julia McKenzie (pictured), all of whom played Miss Marple at various times on British TV between 1984 and 2013? She probably wouldn't have been truly satisfied by any of them; nothing on screen could quite match what she'd imagined.

MRS ARIADNE OLIVER

Christie tried to keep her postwar books up to date with references to miniskirts and hallucinogenic drugs, and Mrs Ariadne Oliver, who often helps Poirot out in the 50s and 60s, was a big joke on the author herself in later life. Like Christie, Mrs Oliver hates public speaking, is plagued by her fans, and is fed up with her fictional detective. But Mrs Oliver can't get rid of hers – a Finn named Sven Hjerson – because he pays the bills. Christie got bored with Poirot, calling him "bombastic" and "tiresome".

Poirot appears much less often in Christie stories after the Second World War, because the professionalisation of the police made private detectives increasingly implausible, whereas amateurs like Mrs Oliver could go on solving crime. Easy to overlook, like many women past middle age, both Ariadne Oliver and Christie liked slipping below the radar.

In an interview to mark her 70th birthday, Christie described how she'd been travelling unrecognised on a train when the woman sitting opposite confidently proclaimed that the most famous author in the world – Christie, of course – was a terrible secret drinker. The same thing happens to Mrs Oliver (played by Zoë Wanamaker in the 2013 Poirot mystery of the same name) in 1956's Dead Man's Folly. And Oliver's detective is with us still – he recently got his own C4 series, Hjerson, in which he's played by Swedish comedian Johan Rheborg. For more Agatha Christie on TV, see page 106

DDLY, FOR A RACE thought by racists to control film and TV, Jews don't seem to get on our televisions much. Slightly more so in film, but that would mainly be films about the Holocaust, and the reason they get made is less about Jews, and more about winning awards.

This is particularly true on British TV. I remember in 1976, when I was 12, watching the Jack Rosenthal Play for Today, Bar Mitzvah Boy. It was probably the first time I'd ever seen something like my life – that is, the life of an ordinary British Jew – portrayed on a TV screen. Before then, I had seen some versions of my life – untrue ones, that is: Jewish cartoon stereotypes, who would sometimes turn up in sketches on The Two Ronnies, or in jokes on The Comedians.

There were Jewish actors on TV, but they weren't playing Jews. Andrew Sachs played a hapless Spaniard in Fawlty Towers. Warren Mitchell played racist Alf Garnett in Til Death Us Do Part. Since then, in sitcoms at least, there has been Simon Amstell's Grandma's House and Robert Popper's Friday Night Dinner, although both of these shows have complex relationships with their Jewishness, and would have been watched by many people who were unaware,

'There were Jewish actors on TV, but they weren't playing Jews'

I think, of their Jewish settings. Neither was as out-and-out Jewish as the lesser-known 1990s sitcom, So Haunt Me, in which Miriam Karlin played the ghost of a very Jewish mother-in-law.

In the US, there are more Jews and everything is more Jewish – especially comedy. The high point is probably Seinfeld, but it's hard to say exactly what's so Jewish about Seinfeld, beyond Jerry himself being Jewish. Arguably, it's less that and more to do with New York, and with endless discussions about the tiny details of life, described once by producer Larry Charles as "a dark Talmud".

Curb Your Enthusiasm, although LA-set, is also very Jewish. There's an episode where Larry David ends up in a ski chalet owned by an Orthodox Jew. After eating something non-kosher that he smuggled in, he's told that he must bury the plate for three days to purify it. Even I, who went to an Orthodox Jewish primary school, had never heard of this.

But it's complex. In Seinfeld, the character based on Larry David, George, is not Jewish: the network felt that one Jew in the main cast was enough. Obviously, David wrote him Jewish anyway, but there was a sense that the audience wouldn't hack too many Jews – that they had a quota. So they made George Italian.

Some of you may be muttering about The Marvelous Mrs Maisel and indeed, that too is very Jewish. But it moves us on to a different subject, which is that even in this very Jewish show, the main character is played by an actor, Rachel Brosnahan, who is not Jewish. This is also the case with the family in Friday Night Dinner (only Tracy-Ann Oberman, who played Auntie Val, was Jewish), with Tom Hardy's character in Peaky Blinders, James Norton's in McMafia, and many more.

In my Channel 4 documentary, Jews Don't Count, we examine this anomaly in the modern trend towards authenticity casting, among many other examples of how the mantras of identity politics don't seem to apply to this one minority.

THE POINT THAT I and the likes of comedian Sarah Silverman make is that, of course, actors should be allowed to act, including parts that are not representative of their own backgrounds. But if authenticity strictures apply in film and TV as regards other minority characters, then why not Jews?

TV is a bit uncertain about Jews. Another person I speak to in the documentary is Jewish actor David Schwimmer, who played a Jewish character, Ross, in Friends. And yet in ten series, this fact about Ross only got one major storyline (in the episode titled The One with the Holiday Armadillo). Friends, of course, has been attacked - correctly - for a lack of diversity in casting, but it's instructive that no one is allowed to suggest that there was a minority represented in Friends. As Schwimmer says, that would only be met with a dismissive "not a real minority".

At one point in Till Death Us Do Part, confronted with the idea that he might be Jewish, Alf Garnett says: "I am not a Y*d! I am not Jewish! It's all lies!" That the

> he is Jewish is interesting, because a lot of Jews are fearful of publicly revealing themselves as Jewish. There is a dynamic between TV's uncertainty about how to portray Jews, and Jews uncertainty about portraying themselves. Is Bar Mitzvah Boy, 45 years on, still the best representation of ordinary British Jews

I've seen on TV? That doesn't feel right, given the strides made in inclusion and representation elsewhere.

We're still waiting for a Jewish show along the lines of Goodness Gracious Me or Famalam. Actually, I have appeared on one, called Friday Night Jews. Except it isn't, it's called Freitagnacht Jews, and it's on German TV. I'm not saying any more about that.

BEHIND THE MASK

He acts, he sings... he cuts hair... Will the real Luke Evans please stand up?

UKE EVANS CAN be a little hard to pin down. Is the 43-year-old Welshman a musical theatre star, who honed his craft in London's West End in the early noughties? The bluff Disney villain in live-action remakes such as Pinocchio and Beauty and the Beast? The unfussy performer of glossy TV dramas (including The Pembrokeshire Murders and Nine Perfect Strangers)? The openly gay action hero who defied convention to star in The Hobbit movies and the Fast & Furious franchise? Or is he the crooner who sings duets with Charlotte Church and Nicole Kidman?

Talking over Zoom from a holiday in Ibiza, Evans admits he likes to keep people guessing. "I've always loved changing my mask. I enjoy the challenge of it," he says. "It's not something that's easy to do because often when you're successful in one thing you get thrown a million other characters that are exactly like that. I had to fight that early on because obviously I didn't have so much control."

Certainly, there was one area where he was keen to avoid typecasting early on Evans came out publicly at the start of his career, in a 2002 interview with Gay Times, but has rarely played a gay role on screen since. Is revealing that part of his life something that he has ever regretted?

"You can see from my work that it hasn't had any impact," he says, firmly. "I'm very happy with how my career has □ gone and that I can be myself off the screen. Hopefully I'm sending out a positive message to young gay people around the world that you don't have to feel like you're an underdog, or that you have to hide away."

If he can sometimes be an intimidating presence on screen, in reality Evans is a genial conversationalist who slugs from a bottle of beer during our chat, laughs easily and responds thoughtfully. Asked to describe himself in three words he goes for "curious, childlike and loyal". And it will undoubtedly please his Welsh fans to know that, despite his American success and life in London, his Valleys accent (he was born in Pontypool) is still very much present and correct.

E'RE ABOUT TO see the actor flexing his action-man muscles yet again in military thriller Echo 3, a new Apple TV+drama created by Oscar-winning screenwriter Mark Boal. The ten-part series follows Evans's army commando (the improbably named Bambi) to Colombia, where he sets out to find his sister, Amber (Jessica Ann Collins), a scientist who has disappeared near the border with Venezuela. Boal is known for the grittily authentic Zero Dark Thirty and The Hurt Locker, and it sounds as though Echo 3 is in a similar vein.

"There's no fluff, it's the real deal," Evans confirms. "There was a lot of weapons and military training with Navy Seals and Delta Force soldiers, who put myself and [co-star] Michiel Huisman through our paces. We were sent through the Appalachian Trail, setting up camp in the middle of the night with Navy Seals giving us five minutes to do it. It was really full on. I loved it."

For many, a tough, grubby action drama would be enough to be getting on with. But Evans has accompanied this new role with a project that couldn't be a starker contrast to the macho heroics of Echo 3 – recording his second album, A Song for You, where he sings covers of songs like Over the Rainbow, Bridge over Troubled Water and You Raise Me Up.

According to Evans, this new collection (which follows his 2019 debut album, At Last) is "full of rousing, anthemic songs that people will mostly know", and if hearing another retread of those old tunes isn't enough to tempt you, he's also enlisted a couple of A-list pals along for the ride.

"I asked Nicole Kidman [his Nine Perfect Strangers co-star] to do a duet with me on the song Say Something and she said 'Yes'," Evans beams. "Charlotte Church is singing Come What May with me. I've known Charlotte since she was a little girl, we used to have the same singing teacher in Cardiff before I went off to study and she became this singing sensation. It was lovely."

But does Evans see himself as an actor who sings or a singer who acts? "Acting is extremely diverse and if you choose the right roles you can challenge yourself until the day you die," he tells me. "When I sing, I sing from somewhere very, very deep within my soul, and it's the same sound I've been making since I was a child singing in the front room to my grandmother. I don't know which one I'd say I love the more, but they both deliver something really special, unique and personal."

'Hopefully I'm sending out a positive message to young gay people'

He does manage to channel his musical inclinations into some roles – he sings in Beauty and the Beast, the aforementioned Pinocchio and Netflix's upcoming animated musical Scrooge: a Christmas Carol, where he voices the title character. He's the best thing in Pinocchio, livening it up with delicious villainy in the role of the Coachman, and despite the film's poor reviews he says he enjoyed the experience.

"It was an absolute joy. They wrote an amazing song for me, I got to go on cables, work with all these brilliant stage kids and do things that you can only do in a Disney movie."

Scrooge will follow – but will he be Welsh? "He should have been a Welsh Scrooge!" Evans laughs. "But, no, he's an English Scrooge. He's not the same Scrooge that you and grand and very ethereal. It's taken years of work to get to this point but it's very Christmassy and something for the kids and the whole family."

And if that weren't enough, there's also Luke Evans Show-time!, a festive special coming to BBC2 that will see him take to the microphone once again for some celebrity duets. "I'm giving a little bit to everybody this Christmas!" he says.

Beaming into living rooms on the BBC at Christmas, with big roles in Disney movies, streaming shows and ITV crime dramas, means that Evans – despite never quite breaking into the Hollywood stratosphere – is a well-known face in the UK these days. How does fame sit with him?

"I'm not resistant to it, I think it would be exhausting to be resistant to it," he says. In fact, if anything it's clear he slightly relishes basking in the attention of his fans.

"I still go to the local Lidl down the street, and they literally cannot believe their eyes!" he laughs. "Listen, we're just human beings. We have an unusual job but, at the end of the day, I'm just a Welsh boy from the Valleys and everybody loves a bargain!"

to define. He's part showman, part serious actor, part singer who records albums with photographs of himself draped artfully across the cover. But maybe that's because he's not quite sure who he is either. Notably, when I ask about any unfulfilled dreams, he claims he's just a frustrated pilot... or hairdresser.

"I can cut hair," he explains with a chuckle.
"I cut my own hair, my dad's hair, my partner's hair, my friends' hair whenever they want.

"When we're on holiday I take my scissors and my comb and my clippers because, more often than not, somebody in the group will want to have a haircut."

And when asked about any lingering ambitions after he's conquered the stage, the screen and the music charts, he has an answer ready. "I'd like to learn to fly a plane," he says quickly, with a smile. "I'd love the freedom of being able to cross countries in the sky."

TEEN DRAMA Elite

Series six available 18 November

Clearly, plenty of viewers worldwide are finding it difficult to stop watching this shamefully addictive, soapy Spanish drama that's set in an exclusive private high school for rich, highly strung teens: it's now onto season six. As so often, the kids are reeling from a shocking death when we enrol again for a new school year and, while several of the students are hellbent on obtaining justice, the wider issues in the pristine classrooms include racism, sexism, domestic abuse and homophobia. Expect a lot more sex and violence.

BIOGRAPHICAL DRAMA The Swimmers ★★★★ 団

Available from Wednesday

The true story of Syrian sisters Yusra and Sara Mardini is rousingly told in this drama from writer/director Sally El Hosaini (My Brother the Devil). With war tearing apart their country in 2015, the teenage swimming prodigies (played by real-life sisters Nathalie and Manal Issa, above) leave their family home in Damascus in search of refugee status in Europe. Yusra's dream is to swim for her country in the Olympics, and that plot thread comes spectacularly to the fore in the film's triumphant, heart-swelling third act.

JAMES MOTTRAM

THRILLER Dreamland ★★★★ ⑮

Available from Sunday

The lean times of the Great ■ Depression are evoked in this action-fuelled period drama starring Margot Robbie (above) as a femme fatale who lures lovestruck teenager Finn Cole into a life of crime. The film contains nods to such outlaw classics as Bonnie and Clyde and Badlands, but Dreamland takes a different tack by having the female as the chief manipulator. The leads are perfectly cast, with Peaky Blinders star Cole especially good as the lonely misfit who dreams of a happy-ever-after future for the couple in Mexico.

STAND-UP COMEDY Trovor Noah

Available from Tuesday

Trevor Noah recently announced that, after seven years, he is to cease hosting one of America's foremost satirical news programmes, The Daily Show. In truth he's always looked a bit awkward stuck behind a desk, so it's good to see him already returning to stand-up comedy with a new Netflix special (Netflix already carries his previous shows, Afraid of the Dark and Son of Patricia). A performer who ably combines politics with observational comedy now tackles the tribulations of learning German, ordering Indian food in Scotland and speaking ill of the dead. JS

Did you know that with the most popular form of equity release, a lifetime mortgage, you continue to own 100 per cent of your home?

Homeowners aged 55 and over have the option of unlocking tax-free cash from their home on a fixed rate of interest and choosing whether to make repayments. You could unlock from a minimum of £10,000 up to 50% of the value of your property. What would you spend the money on?

Maybe you're planning home renovations, the holiday of a lifetime or providing a cash gift to family. Once you've repaid any mortgage the money is yours to enjoy spending.

WHEN IS THE MONEY REPAID?

The money that you release, plus the interest that you accrue, is repaid when you die or go into long-term care and your property is sold. There are also now plans that allow you to pay off some of the interest each month and you can choose the percentage that suits you. By paying a percentage of the interest, you can reduce the amount of debt that is being rolled up.

CAN I PROTECT MY LOVED ONES?

You may be concerned about passing on debt to your family, but all equity release plans come with a no negative equity guarantee, which means that you can never pass on the debt to your estate, providing the property is sold for a reasonable amount. There are also plans that allow you to safeguard a percentage of your property value so that you can still pass on an inheritance to your loved ones.

HOW MUCH COULD I RELEASE?

We're pleased to be working with Age Partnership+, part of the UK's No. 1 equity release adviser*, to offer an equity release service. Through our service, your dedicated adviser can provide you with a personalised illustration so you can understand the features and risks and find out how much you could release. They will help you understand if equity release could be right for you and will tell you everything you need to know, including the effect on the amount of inheritance you can leave and if your entitlement to means-tested benefits could be affected now or in the future.

Your adviser will review a wide range of plans from the whole of the market to find the most suitable solution for your individual circumstances.

It's important to know that equity release may involve a home reversion plan or a lifetime mortgage, which is secured against your property. Your quotation is free and you are under no obligation to proceed. Only if you choose to proceed and your case completes would a fee of £1,995 be payable.

Elton John Live: Farewell from Dodger Stadium

Available live at 3.30am on Monday Elton John has said that his current tour will be the last time he plays live in Europe or North America. If that proves to be the case, the 75-yearold aims to go out in style with a farewell concert that revisits the scene of one of his great triumphs.

In 1975, his gig at Dodger Stadium in Los Angeles saw him move from popular singer to proper global superstar. The return, which will be livestreamed around the world, is billed as his most spectacular production of all time – and there is another half-century of hits for him to draw his set list from. JS

Myth and martial arts are B blended together in this energetic animated adventure. Kelly Marie Tran voices Raya, who sets out to resurrect lost water dragon Sisu (Awkwafina on peak form) and unify the divided nation of Kumandra, a once-great dragon-worshipping kingdom racked by conflict.

The film fuses old and new House of Mouse tropes with vigour and verve. Think Moana and Frozen, but with more butt-kicking. Director Don Hall's latest Disney film, interplanetary adventure Strange World, arrives in cinemas on 23 November. KEVIN HARLEY

SPORTS DOCUMENTARY Adriano Emperor

All three episodes available from Monday

The average Brit might not fully appreciate how much Brazilian striker Adriano (above), who never played in the Premier League and flopped at the 2006 World Cup, meant to his own nation's football fans. This three-part documentary tells his story, beginning in the favelas and going as far as Italy, where his goals for Inter Milan mixing a fleet touch with brute strength, took Serie A by storm. Depression, grief, hedonism and homesickness stopped Adriano becoming a true great, but "the Emperor" is a much more complex and interesting elite sportsman than most. JS

CRIME DRAMA Tulsa King

Episode three available from Monday Sylvester Stallone's gloriously cheesy new mob drama continues. He's Dwight Manfredi, a high-ranking New York mafioso who, after 25 years in jail, has been banished to Tulsa, Oklahoma and told to pioneer organised crime in the south at the fine old age of 75. That he has done with gusto, forcibly taking over a legal cannabis shop, staying in the best hotel in town and accidentally sleeping with a local police officer. Who will he punch, charm or outwit this week? Though it's not a clever or sophisticated series, it knows its strengths are in wish fulfilment and laconic wit, and it plays to them well. JS

this early 1997 triumph. Pam Grier (below) stars as the flight attendant of the title, who is pressured into an entrapment scam after being arrested for cash smuggling. The superb cast also includes Robert Forster, Samuel L Jackson, Robert De Niro and Michael Keaton, while the soundtrack brims with funk and soul classics. Imaginatively adapting Elmore Leonard's Rum Punch, Tarantino's crime thriller is a homage to, and updating of, 1970s pulp blaxploitation fiction.

DRAMA Walter Presents: The Red Door

Complete series available from Friday In an industrial building, Italian detective Leonardo Cagliostro (Lino Guanciale) is confronted with a shocking murder scene: the victim is him. After seeing in a flashback that he died in a gun fight, we learn that Leo is staying on Earth to protect his wife, who he fears is also at risk. Trouble is, as he's a ghost, nobody can see or hear him - apart, that is, from teenager Vanessa (Valentina Romani, above). A dark and moody combination of the supernatural and crime, it's not exactly Randall and Hopkirk (Deceased). JANE RACKHAM

DRAMA

The Secret Life of the American Teenager

Series 1–5 available from Friday

An American teen drama that has a lot of familiar elements. The story centres around Amy (Shailene Woodley), who is 15 when the show begins and discovers that she is pregnant by her ex-boyfriend. Critics generally disliked the show for its unsubtle moralising and simple characterisation, but US audiences couldn't get enough of the complicated love lives of the Juergens family. All five seasons are available as a box set, possibly best consumed on a sleepy Sunday morning with a large cup of tea. JS

Netflix's recent drama about infamous serial killer Jeffrey Dahmer has had a mixed reception, though terrible reviews haven't stopped it being popular with subscribers. Programme-makers are however on safer ground, so to speak, making a documentary about the man who murdered 17 people between 1978 and 1991. This four-parter takes us through Dahmer's childhood and early life before examining the period during which Dahmer was killing with abandon but, because of a combination of bad luck and police complacency, was allowed to get away with it for an agonisingly long time. DRAMA The Devil's Hour

Available now

One of those dramas that's hard to categorise or to describe in detail without spoiling it. Suffice to say that if wintry psychological spookiness is what's required, here it is in a package as fresh as a new wound. Troubled Jessica Raine's habit of waking at the same time in the middle of every night is already disturbing enough before she is linked to a murder case. Peter Capaldi, meanwhile, is terrifying as... well, what is he? You'll have to watch to find out, but know that this is the role that really brings the actor's talent for pained, menacing wisdom to the fore. JACK SEALE

DOCUMENTARY The Confession

Both episodes available from Friday This two-part documentary from writer-director Sam Hobkinson (who also made last year's acclaimed documentary Misha and the Wolves) recounts the strange and disturbing case of mother-of-two Patricia Hall from Pudsey in West Yorkshire who vanished in 1992. When a search operation turned up no trace of her, her husband Keith became the focus of the investigation. That revealed no evidence of wrongdoing on his part, and as Patricia was still missing the case seemed to go cold. Then Keith fell in love with a mysterious new woman, leading to a judicial controversy that still rages today. JS

CRIME THRILLER Poker Face **

Available now

Russell Crowe directs and stars in this low-budget chamber piece, playing a tech mogul who gathers a group of friends at his plush mansion for a high-stakes poker game. Unbeknown to him, a gang is planning a raid on his priceless art collection the same night. Liam Hemsworth and RZA round out an impressive cast, and Crowe makes the most of his claustrophobic locations. But the script, co-written by Crowe, lacks tension and seems unsure if it wants to be a home-invasion thriller or a tense gambling drama.

COMEDY DRAMA The Phantom of the Open ★★★★ 🗵

Available from 18 November

Loosely based on a true story, this stars Mark Rylance as Maurice Flitcroft, an amateur golfer who ruffled feathers when he dared to gatecrash the upper echelons of the sport. Rylance is excellent as the lovable working-class everyman, and his twinkly-eyed performance goes a long way to elevate the film above more standard crowdpleasing fare. There's also genuine warmth between him and Sally Hawkins, playing Maurice's wife Jean, whom he earnestly promises a life of champagne and caviar.

DRAMA Dangerous Liaisons

Episode 3 available from Sunday The intrigue continues in this new take on society machinations in 1780s France that's more energetic and histrionic than the 1988 John Malkovich movie, but also grittier in tone and wider in scope. This week, Valmont (Nicholas Denton) is given a sexy new assignment that may finally reveal the limits of his manipulative powers, and which renews his sparring with Camille (Alice Englert), both of them individuals whose exterior panache hides a damaged soul. After another web of betrayal and humiliation is spun, Camille decides that revenge is a dish best served bloody. JS

DRAMA Leverage: Redemption

Season two available 16 November Remember Hustle on BBC1? This is its American cousin – or at least, Leverage was ten years ago. Now it's back for a reboot without star Timothy Hutton, but with Noah Wyle and British actor Gina Bellman still in the cast. Wyle and Bellman are members of a high-class, highconcept gang of con artists, dedicated to liberating money and priceless goods from people who deserve to be fleeced. In season two they're working on their biggest and most outrageous heist yet, which can mean only one thing: it's time for the stunts to get sillier and the one-liners to get even cornier. JS

This vertigo-inducing thriller follows the plight of two stranded climbers. Shazam! star Grace Caroline Currey (above) plays a grieving climber whose vlogger pal (Virginia Gardner) suggests that a day spent scaling a remote 2,000ft radio tower might help her regain her mojo. However, as it is out in the Mojave Desert and the ladders are rusting and rickety, the pair's climb is more perilous than they anticipated. SPORT Rugby League World Cup 12.45pm BBC1 Catch up via iPlayer Whoever had the bright idea of combining the men's, women's and wheelchair World Cups into a single month-long festival of crash-bang action deserves a pat on the back. It's worked brilliantly so far.

The wheelchair final was contested yesterday, leaving the last men's and women's events to this afternoon. The women kick off at 1.15pm, but which two teams will take part is still hard to call. England and Australia are good bets: both comfortably topped their groups after two games.

England could well make the men's final at 4pm, too. They beat semi-final opponents Samoa 60–6 in their group so will fancy their chances of earning a spot to face either Australia or New Zealand in the final. CERI THOMAS

GAME SHOW Michael McIntyre's The Wheel

6.45pm BBC1 Catch up via iPlayer Have you noticed that the pandemic seems to be having a real effect on the expectations of the contestants? They appear far less acquisitive, and often what they want most is to be reunited with family members from whom they've separated, throw a big party, or honour a loved one who has died during the lockdowns.

Certainly, the latest batch of hopefuls would all be worthy winners. And, luckily, they have an A-list line-up of celebs aiding them, with everyone from Alexander Armstrong to Gloria Hunniford sitting on the spokes.

McIntyre is also on fine form as he admits to wanting to turn his new cry of "It's one in three, who's it going to be?" into a catchphrase. DAVID BROWN

Castle Howard: through the Seasons

8.10pm C4 Catch up via All 4 At the start of the summer season, Castle Howard's staff are going full throttle with money-making schemes. A classic car show is a roaring success, with huge queues on the day.

Slower to get off the ground is Nick Howard's plan to fly over the castle in a Tiger Moth. "Is that it? Or is it a lawnmower?" wonders his son George when he hears a distant buzz.

Unfortunately, by August visitor numbers were down because of the unprecedented heatwave. Nick doesn't seem too bothered, though, as he makes the most of the peace and quiet to play with his drone.

Superficially this glossy Mexican thriller is about 32 beauty queens, desperate for a better life, who are incarcerated in a mansion while being groomed for the 1989 Miss Mexico pageant. However, the underlying message is the objectification of women. The girls are fawned over by their sponsors, referred to by province rather than their names and forced to undergo plastic surgery in a bid for perfection.

Observing this exploitation is a shocked Elena, who has landed the job of "polishing them from the inside" through education. Despite the glamour and the glitz, it's a dark, disturbing tale. JR

Naughty Tories: John Major and Edwina Currie

9.10pm Channel 5 Catch up via My5 This is one long stifled snigger of a political profile. A chance for commentators like Jeremy Vine and comedians such as Zoe Lyons to admit to being surprised and mystified when news broke in 2002 of John Major and Edwina Currie's four-year affair. It was, at the time, a revelation that this supposed grey man of Westminster had been romping with egg-scare MP Currie. But two decades on, these pundits don't seem to have recovered from the shock.

Only in its final section does it add anything new, as the focus shifts to the reasons Major has been somewhat rehabilitated in the eyes of the media, while Currie is still perceived as a scorned "scarlet woman". DBr

DRAMA Casualty

9.45pm BBC1 Catch up via iPlayer Until recently, I'd have said that Casualty airing on a Saturday was one of the few things we could rely on in this world. But its absence of late has had me worried: might the BBC be losing faith in the healers at Holby?

Well, thankfully, they're all back, and in this return episode, it's Rash who is spotlighted as he treats a patient whose tattoos suggest an affiliation with the far right.

Listen out, too, for a mention of a fallen colleague from the defunct Holby City. As is revealed, medical staff now have the chance to compete for the Jac Naylor Award. Though I can't help feeling that she'd have poured a bucketful of scorn on the scheme. DBr

DOCUMENTARY Messi the Enigma

10.55pm (11.55pm in Wales) BBC1 Available now on iPlayer

If Diego Maradona generally wins out over Lionel Messi when discussion turns to the topic of the greatest footballer ever, that might be because of Maradona's sheer mythic status. As this fine documentary makes clear, Messi isn't totemic like his fellow Argentinian, and there are those who - quite unfairly blame him for that.

There's an amazing story of the time Messi was among a group of fans and they didn't even notice him. But his genius on the pitch is unparalleled, and we see it taking shape in remarkable footage from his childhood. He wasn't egotistical then, and – with his fifth World Cup looming - he still isn't now. SIMON O'HAGAN

The Ghost of Richard Harris 9.00pm Sky Arts

Catch up via Sky Go/Now Sometimes you stumble on an old Richard Harris film and, regardless of how well the film itself has held up, you can't get enough of him. There's a clip in this loving, feature-length profile where we see Harris simply open a door and stand there, blue eyes blazing – it's up there with Brando and Burton. That hard gaze and the rolling baritone would have been enough even without his grand physique, or the anger that he couldn't explain but which fired many great performances. All are explored in Adrian Sibley's dream-like assemblage of clips and tributes. There is much more to Harris than the roistering hellraiser, the film argues, but it's fun to hear about the hellraising anyway. Like the time he celebrated his divorce by taking a private jet on a week-long binge around Europe, with a press photographer along for the ride. DAVID BUTCHER See pages 22 and 139

FILM REVIEWS

□ Shazam! ★★★★ 6.40-9.10pm ITV1 □

FANTASY A teenager is transformed into a muscular superhero in this laugh-packed take on a vintage comic book. Foster home runaway Billy (Asher Angel) has crime-fighting powers bestowed upon him by a wizard and becomes a lycra-clad beefcake (Zachary Levi, above), but still with the mind of an adolescent. However, youthful frolics are abruptly curtailed by the arrival of a ruthless villain (Mark Strong). Director David F Sandberg celebrates and mocks the conventions of superhero movies and he's helped by an impressive cast, especially Jack Dylan Grazer as Billy's best friend. TERRY STAUNTON (US 2019, may be edited for content, HD)

Snoopy and Charlie Brown: the Peanuts Movie ★★★★

OF THE

COMEDY Charlie Brown and the gang return with this charming animation, which has Charlie bidding to woo the town's new "red-haired girl". That's just a framework for some classic Peanuts scenarios, with Lucy as the queen of crabbiness and Snoopy as the supreme fantasist, imagining he's a World War One flying ace. Kids and adults will love it. DAVE ALDRIDGE (US 2015, HD)

13 Going on 30 $\star\star\star$ 2.40-4.45pm 5 Star

ROMCOM This frothy update on the body-swap theme sees a teenage girl's dreams become reality when she's transformed into a successful 30-year-old woman (Jennifer Garner). The events that follow are unrealistic fancy, but Garner's delightful turn helps paper over many of the plot holes, and Mark Ruffalo is nicely cast as her best friend. SLOAN FREER (US 2004, edited for language, HD)

The Blue Lamp ★★★★ 5.05-6.50pm Talking PG Pictures TV

CRIME Scripted by TEB Clarke (Passport to Pimlico),

this classic documentarystyle film stars Jimmy Hanley as the newbie police officer who goes after the London gang who shot veteran copper Jack Warner. Hanley is a touch lightweight, but a pre-stardom Dirk Bogarde is outstanding as a petty crook. DAVID PARKINSON (UK 1949, BW)

The Nanny Diaries ***

COMEDY Scarlett Johansson stars in this entertaining but unexceptional adaptation of the satirical bestseller about nannying on New York's snooty Upper East Side. She plays a student who gets mistaken for a nanny, and winds up child-rearing for Big Apple couple Laura Linney and Paul Giamatti. The humour is blunt and broad, but Johansson has great comic instincts. DA (US 2007, edited for content, HD)

Something's Gotta Give ***

9.00-11.40pm ITVBe

ROMCOM Jack Nicholson and Diane Keaton lead this frothy portrayal of postmenopausal love from Nancy Meyers (The Holiday). Keaton shines as a divorced playwright who thinks affairs of the heart are a folly, until she falls for her daughter's ageing lover (Nicholson). While the latter plays to wolfish type, it's a joy to see him and Keaton reunited for the first time since Reds (1981). sF (US 2003, swearing, sex scenes, nudity, HD)

The Equalizer $\star\star\star$ 9.10-11.45pm C4

THRILLER In this slick reboot of the 1980s TV show, Denzel Washington takes the role of Robert McCall, guardian angel to those in trouble. McCall is resourceful and damn-near indestructible as he uses his "particular set of skills" to confound Russian gangsters. It's a bit ludicrous, but Washington's natural charisma keeps total disbelief at bay. JEREMY ASPINALL (US 2014, violence, swearing, HD)

WAR This version of Francis Ford Coppola's Vietnam War opus runs 30 minutes longer than the original cut. The story remains the same, as Martin Sheen travels up the Mekong to terminate Marlon Brando's rebel command. A harrowing masterwork, the film is filled with quotable lines, including Robert Duvall's classic, "I love the smell of napalm in the morning." ADRIAN TURNER (US 1979/2019,

SPORT World Cup Football

Qatar v Ecuador 3.00pm (kick-off 4pm) BBC1; highlights 10.50pm ITV1

Expect the usual all-singing, all-dancing, more than slightly baffling Opening Ceremony as the 22nd World Cup begins at Qatar's Al Bayt Stadium. And once that flim-flam is out of the way, the host

 $nation\,play\,their\,first\,match, against\,Ecuador.$

It marks the start of one of the most controversial World Cups ever. The spectre of Qatar's human rights record, its attitude towards same-sex relationships and its treatment of migrant workers hangs over the entire tournament. Questions about all of those are likely to persist, no matter how good the football.

And the football could be very good indeed.

The 32 teams taking part really do represent the cream of the game; and the winter start (to dodge the punishing temperatures of Qatar's hottest months) means that the top players aren't carrying the weight of a full season in their legs. With any luck, the march to the final on 18 December could feature some truly corking games. CERI THOMAS Jonathan Swain's Viewpoint: page 11 See also feature: page 14

The Larkins

8.00pm ITV1 Catch up via ITV Hub
Meta-humour isn't something to be expected in The Larkins, but there's a nod and a wink in Primrose's "you look different" comment to Mariette this evening. The remark is pertinent to the plotline (in a way I won't reveal), but it's also a not-so-subtle reference to the recasting of Pop and Ma's eldest daughter, who's finally back from her seemingly endless honeymoon with Charley.

Not that her dad is around to welcome the newlyweds home – he's still in prison, charming the wardens and enjoying the television set he's had installed in his cell. As ever, he's seeing the positives, but an escape committee in the village want him back and have started planning an appeal. DAVID BROWN

Escape to the Château

8.00pm C4 Catch up via All 4
It might be distinctly chilly here, but at Château Strawbridge it's a scorching summer. The school holidays have begun, but there are still jobs to be done. Drought has left the water level in the moat worryingly low, so the family need to work together to save the fish.

Meanwhile, there's a wedding to prepare for. On the menu are bitterballen – meatballs dipped in mustard mayonnaise – a request by the bride for her Dutch husband, who will arrive with his best man on a customised tandem. In the walled garden, Dick and Angel create a new outdoor entertaining area and launch it with a candlelit dinner. Perfect, heart-warming Sunday-night fare.

BBC Young Jazz Musician Final

8.00pm BBC4 Catch up via iPlayer Jazz might only flirt intermittently with the mainstream these days, but it still boasts a vibrant subculture. And just to show it's not for gentlemen of a certain age, four males (two pianists, a double bassist and a guitarist) and one female saxophonist, all aged between 20 and 23, do battle in the Grand Final.

The format is challenging, since comparing players on different instruments is far from easy. Backed by a crack trio, each contestant will perform a set, which must include at least one self-penned composition. A panel of respected British jazzers will decide who succeeds 2020's winner, London pianist Deschanel Gordon. JOHN AIZLEWOOD

COMEDY DRAMA Ghosts US 8.30pm BBC3

All 18 episodes are on iPlayer today

It's Button House, but not as we know it. American remakes of UK shows always hold a certain fascination. Have they ruined the original or done it justice? Happily, this CBS adaptation is a rare hit and in its first year became the top-rated new series on US TV.

Some characters at "Woodstone Estate" remain the same. Differences include a Viking instead of a caveman, and a trouserless Wall Street "finance bro" rather than a Tory MP. Additions are a Native American, a 1960s hippy and a 1920s jazz singer.

Retaining the original's warm charm and daft wit, it's the best cross-Atlantic comedy remake since The Office. MH

When Serena taunted Luke about staying safely in Canada while his wife and child were enduring unknown horrors in Gilead, we knew that wouldn't be the end of it. So, at the first opportunity he bravely (foolishly?) announces he's crossing the border to discover Hannah's whereabouts. The expedition is, of course, hide-behind-a-cushion tense, despite an exquisitely tender scene where Luke sweetly sings Al Green's Let's Stay Together to June.

Meanwhile, Serena is well and truly trapped in her gilded cage. It's obvious that the commanders back in Gilead don't want her to be involved in anything, while the wives' adoration of her pregnant state is downright creepy. JR

Why Ships Sink: the Zeebrugge Disaster

9.00pm Channel 5 Catch up via My5

It was Britain's worst peacetime maritime tragedy since 1919, and the story of the Herald of Free Enterprise casts a long shadow. The Belgian port from which it sailed in 1987 is still a byword for catastrophic loss. This documentary combines survivor testimony, original footage and CGI reconstruction to build a terrifying picture of how things went wrong.

We hear, too, from rescuers who climbed aboard the capsized ferry to search for passengers trapped inside, including how lorry drivers hidden in an air pocket were dramatically saved. The coroner who investigated the tragedy also speaks for the first time. ORLA THOMAS

Full series available now on iPlayer
We get a milder, more thoughtful despatch from North Africa this week. Don't worry, there are still jeeps racing across the desert to the strains of Motörhead, explosions and men with thousand-yard stares. But we're reminded our renegades aren't just fighters, they're lovers, too.

In flashbacks to Jock Lewes's pre-war romance it's a shock to see him in civvy mode – all cream suit and striped tie, strolling past daffodils in a country garden. Is this our bombinventing, super-cool commando?

We're soon back to the "oven made of sand", where the new regiment, now with some success under its pistol belt, is about to get a motto. Paddy Mayne suggests it should be, "Drink rum, fight dirty and f the rules", but as we know, that's not what ended up on the badge.

FILM REVIEWS

■ Surge ★★★ 10.00-11.35pm BBC2

THRILLER This nerve-racking thriller follows a young man's spiral into violence and lawlessness over a frantic 24-hour period. Ben Whishaw plays an airport security guard who always seems to hover on the periphery. After a disastrous birthday lunch with his parents, he goes on a crime spree through London, liberated by living by his own rules, seemingly for the first time. Debut director Aneil Karia (best known for Channel 4's Top Boy) uses claustrophobic close-ups and handheld framing to nail-biting effect, but it's Whishaw's multilayered performance that's the key reason for watching. JOSH WINNING (UK 2020, violence, swearing, HD)

U

\bullet Babe $\star\star\star\star$ 2 12.45-2.30pm ITV1 U

FANTASY This Australian family comedy came out of nowhere to enchant millions around the world. The "babe" of the title is an orphaned piglet, adopted by a family of Border collies, who learns how to handle sheep under the patient training of kindly farmer James Cromwell. It's a delight from start to finish, and the film won an Oscar for its visual effects. JOHN FERGUSON (US/Aus 1995, HD)

Despicable Me 2 8 ****

2.30-4.20pm ITV1

COMEDY This animated sequel finds former criminal Gru (voiced by Steve Carell) faced with a new evil threat. Aware of how important Gru's little yellow helpers, the Minions, were to the first film, directors Pierre Cottin and Chris Renaud place them centre stage – at one point turning them against their beloved master. It's a nifty twist in a joyful romp brimming with laughs. TERRY STAUNTON (US 2013, HD)

Legally Blonde $\star\star\star\star$ 4.50-6.45pm ITV2

COMEDY Reese Witherspoon stars here as Elle Woods, a sorority queen who gets dumped by her boyfriend

(Matthew Davis) before he goes to Harvard Law School, as he thinks she's not smart enough to be his wife. So the vivacious Valley Girl decides to follow him there to prove him wrong and get him back. It's all wonderfully silly, and Witherspoon is perfectly cast. JOANNA BERRY (US 2001, edited for content, HD)

The Adjustment Bureau ★★★ 6.00-8.05pm Great Movies

SCI-FI Politician Matt Damon and dancer Emily Blunt find themselves up against the forces of fate in this mix of love story and high-concept thriller. Although ambitious and imaginative, the film struggles to explain some nagging inconsistencies. However, Damon and Blunt have such great chemistry that we do start to believe the ripple effects from a kiss could indeed change the future. TREVOR JOHNSTON (US 2010, edited for content)

Bo66y ★★★★ 7.15-9.00pm Sky Showcase

DOCUMENTARY The stars of the football world come out for this movie charting the life of Bobby Moore, from his zenith as England's World Cup-winning captain to his later struggles and untimely death, aged just 51. Vibrant footage from 1966 hammers home just what Moore and his team-mates achieved in this fitting tribute to an icon. JAMES LUXFORD (UK 2016, col/BW) World Cup coverage, p14

The Edge of Seventeen ****

10.00-11.35pm BBC3

COMEDY DRAMA Hailee Steinfeld steals the show here as an awkward teen navigating life with her manic family and dealing with unrequited crushes. Among the film's pleasures is the begrudging friendship between Steinfeld and her weary, sarcastic teacher, played by Woody Harrelson. The comic interplay between the pair is fantastic. JL (US 2016, swearing, HD)

War of the Worlds $\star\star\star\star$ 10.55pm-1.05am C4

SCI-FI Steven Spielberg's update of the HG Wells classic is a disaster epic of two halves. The first hour is a masterclass in escalating tension, as divorcee Tom Cruise flees the invasion with his estranged kids. It's only in the second hour that the story begins to wilt, when the CGI aliens are revealed and Spielberg schmaltz takes over. ALAN JONES (US 2005, violence, HD)

David Baddiel: Jews Don't Count

9.00pm C4 Catch up via All 4

If you have read David Baddiel's eye-opening book with the same title, you'll know what to expect here. The bonus ingredient is a throng of great contributors (David Schwimmer, Miriam Margolyes, Neil Gaiman and Sarah Silverman among them) backing up Baddiel's central point, which is that progressive opinion for some reason doesn't treat Jews as a vulnerable minority. As Baddiel says: "In a culture where all forms of racism are being monitored and called out and held accountable, one form is apparently inaudible."

There are glaring examples, including that of a play at the Royal Court last year which featured an unscrupulous international capitalist named Hershel Fink. The character had originally been written as a Mexican-American, but was changed for fear of offending a minority...

Baddiel explores this and other examples in a polemic that delivers the cold, bracing jolt of an articulate voice colliding with a real problem. It's sharp and moving – but this is Baddiel, so it's entertaining as well. DAVID BUTCHERSee feature: page 28

lolo's Anglesey

7.00pm BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer

Dragonflies, bats and dolphins are all on the agenda as Welsh naturalist Iolo Williams embarks on his final visit to the Isle of Anglesey in North Wales. All in all, this has been a hugely enjoyable series, even though you sometimes wish Williams had spent a little more time on each of the critters and habitats he visits.

The whistlestop-tour air about proceedings continues tonight as Williams squeezes in a visit to an old church at night, a walk through some wetlands and a dive to a shipwreck – but his genial charm makes the whole thing tick as he shares odd snippets of information about the flora and fauna he encounters. EastEnders

7.30pm (8.00pm in Northern Ireland) BBC1 Catch up via iPlayer Janine's latest stint on the Square hasn't worked out, mainly because the writers haven't really got to grips with her reasons for being back in Walford. Instead of the classic schemer of old, what we've seen instead is this oddly needy figure who has latched herself onto Mick.

Now, ahead of what's believed to be a big Christmas departure, we're getting a few belated surprises – in order, I suspect, for her eventual exit to feel a bit more significant. Tonight, for instance, there's a fall down the steps at the Tube station, and we'll soon see the temporary return of Sid Owen as her brother Ricky. But it's all, I'm afraid, a case of too little, too late. DAVID BROWN

Only Connect

8.00pm BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer Host Victoria Coren Mitchell is speaking for us all when she talks of her show having been messed about by the BBC2 schedulers. It feels like an acknowledgement of the queasy dislocation we feel when Only Connect gets shunted to Tuesday evenings. But fear not, because we're back on the terra firma that is Monday for tonight's clash between the Jillies (fans of Jilly Cooper) and the Morporkians (aficionados of Terry Pratchett).

It's a spirited fight that comes complete with a rock-hard missing vowels category – authors merged with comedy characters – that feels like a more sadistic version of the answer smash round from Richard Osman's House of Games. DBr

Series 1 and 2 available on iPlayer
There had better be a rug-pulling twist coming in next week's finale, as this series has taken a long time to reveal not very much. It should feel as though livelihoods are at stake, but there are too many dull scenes in that café where Jamie (Aaron Anthony) constantly looks like he's about to cry into the sleeves of his cardigan.

And when we're not there, we're following mum Christine (Rakie Ayola), who's usually either feeding incriminatory documents into a shredder or rooting through people's drawers. She's apparently still a social worker, but you wouldn't know it, what with the job of acting in an overtly suspicious manner now occupying all her waking hours. DBr

Hong Kong's Fight for Freedom

9.00pm BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer To say that the protestors in the siege at the Hong Kong Polytechnic University considered their actions to be a final stand is no understatement: many had a copy of their will stashed in a backpack in case the stand-off cost them their life. But despite the 2019 showdown being the fieriest flashpoint to date, support for such protests dwindled in its aftermath.

The concluding hour of this sobering look at Beijing's crackdown ponders the legacy of the battle for autonomy. One unsettling conclusion reached by an activist is that their fight may have sped up suppression by the Communist Party. But she also appears certain that the opportunity to rise up will come again. DRAMA

The White Lotus

9.00pm Sky Atlantic Catch up via Sky Go/Now Whether or not this second series is as good as the first – discuss – it's still a gorgeous fresco of awfulness set against the loveliest of backdrops. You could watch it with the sound down just to admire the characters' swirly Italian shirts, chic swimwear and bejewelled dresses.

Upping the style factor tonight is a band of gay men led by expat Quentin (Tom Hollander in a stripey suit), whom we previously glimpsed in the hotel bar. He takes Tanya (Jennifer Coolidge) under his wing, introducing one pal with the beautifully delivered line: "Didier's family have the most incredible family estate in Eze, which you have to see before it crumbles entirely to the ground." DB

SERIES FINALE

If I'd booked into Tranquillum House for ten days of calming serenity, I'd be asking for drugs by Masha (Nicole Kidman) has meant it's been full-on crazy rather than relaxing. "Masha would never put you in any harm," the guests are reassured after they endure a deliberately cruel exercise that's supposed to make them "open up".

With no plans for a second series, this finale ties up the loose ends. However, a flash-forward updating us on each character may leave you more confused. Do they really have happy endings, or is it something Frances (Melissa McCarthy) dreamt up? JANE RACKHAM

England v Iran 12 noon (kick-off 1pm) BBC1; USA v Wales 6.00pm S4C, 6.05pm ITV1 (kick-off 7pm); highlights 10.40pm (11.10pm Scotland & Northern Ireland) BBC1 England's first game of a tournament always arrives amid an air of brittle optimism, bullish self-confidence and twanging nerves, and the BBC's build-up to this opening Group

B match is likely to reflect all of that and more. Iran sit 15 places below the Three Lions in Fifa's rankings, but anyone expecting a comfortable win probably hasn't watched England in many World Cups. Many Wales fans, though, haven't seen their team in any. Most of those cheering on Gareth Bale and co in Al Rayyan today won't have been born the last time Wales played in a World Cup (Sweden in 1958). Win or lose to the USA in the second Group B match, this is a watershed moment for Welsh football. CT

DRAMA Dusting down the classic story of the little man winning big, this triple Oscar winner is shot through with genuine impassioned commitment. Sylvester Stallone is highly convincing as Philadelphia boxer Rocky Balboa, who makes the most of his opportunities and ends up having a crack at the heavyweight champion of the Rocky Balboa, who makes the most of his opportunities and ends up having a crack at the heavyweight champion of the world, Apollo Creed (Carl Weathers, by way of Muhammad Ali). Sly also wrote the script and was rewarded with Oscar nominations for both acting and writing, while the film itself beat Taxi Driver, All the President's Men and Network to win best picture. JOHN MARRIOTT (US 1976, violence, swearing, HD)

Man on a Tightrope ★★★ 11.50am-2.05pm

Talking Pictures TV

DRAMA This absorbing film is based on real-life events, about a circus troupe fleeing communist Czechoslovakia. It's well acted, particularly by Fredric March and Robert Beatty, and neatly directed by Elia Kazan. The fact that this was the movie Kazan was working on when he "named names" during the McCarthyist witch-hunts that consumed Hollywood adds a touch of irony.

prama James Stewart stars here as a baseball player who turns bomber pilot. Director Anthony Mann seems more at home with the male bonding between Stewart and his fellow trainee pilots, but June Allyson still makes an impact as his wife. The film particularly comes alive during the thrilling aerial sequences. DAVID PARKINSON (US 1955, HD)

Steptoe and Son ★★★ 5.10-7.00pm

COMEDY This is one of the better sitcom spin-offs, with

Ray Galton and Alan Simpson contributing a script that has both a half-decent story and good gags. Wilfrid Brambell and Harry H Corbett reprise their roles as bickering rag-and-bone men to good effect, with dad Albert typically derisive of Harold's endearingly oafish attempts to better himself. DP (UK 1972, may be edited for content)

ACTION Despite his obvious limitations as an actor, Steven Seagal's rock-fisted martial arts style has earned him a lengthy career in the biff-'em-up genre. He made his action debut with this movie (also known as Nico), playing a cop whose massive drug bust is suddenly stolen by FBI men. Providing the actual acting talent are Pam Grier, Sharon Stone and Henry Silva. JOHN FERGUSON (US 1988, violence, swearing, drug abuse, HD) war Receiving a rare showing, this Australian drama examines the horrors endured by horses roped into service during the First World War. The cavalry charge devised by Anthony Andrews in order to seize a Turkish water supply is both exciting and disturbing, as classical and modern approaches to warfare collide. As you would expect from the director of Phar Lap and Free Willy, Simon Wincer makes the most of both the animals and scenery. DP (Aus 1987, swearing, HD)

DRAMA Director Ken Loach's study of mental illness and its treatment is both uncompromising and realistic. The scenes in which teenager Sandy Ratcliff is given electroconvulsive therapy are particularly disturbing. Rarely has family life been presented in such a gloomy light, and Bill Dean and Grace Cave deserve much credit for their portrayals as the detestable parents. DP (UK 1971, violence, swearing)

BOOKS

Between the Covers

7.00pm BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer RT readers are a discerning bunch, so what do you do with books that aren't holding your attention? Abandon them or persist until the final page? Advocating the first option here is Sophie Raworth, who confesses to growing so disenchanted with a novel that she chucked it overboard on a ship. Paterson Joseph, on the other hand, feels he needs to struggle through, no matter how stodgy the subject matter.

Luckily, the titles being discussed tonight get a more favourable reaction. And they are, in case you want to form your own opinion, the newly published Sometimes People Die by Simon Stephenson and Booker-shortlisted classic The Long Song by Andrea Levy. DAVID BROWN

INTERVIEW

Louis Theroux Interviews...

9.00pm BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer This series of Louis Theroux having informal and intimate chats with a host of celebrities is a real treat. Tonight he meets Canadian comedian Katherine Ryan – a panel-show regular who has written her own television stand-up specials and prides herself on her outspoken sets.

Visiting Ryan at home to talk about her comedy and life as a mum to 13-year-old daughter Violet, Theroux then accompanies her to Southend-on-Sea where she performs her latest stand-up show, Missus. It's followed by a secret gig at a London comedy club, before spending time with her family on a rare day off. KAY RIBEIRO Jane Garvey on the box: page 13

Miriam and Alan: Lost in Scotland and Beyond

9.00pm C4 Catch up via All 4
Miriam Margolyes and Alan Cumming have very much left Scotland behind as they continue their overseas jaunt in sunny southern California. No preview was available, but Cumming is sure to sing another wee tune as he's driving along, while Margolyes will undoubtedly say or do something that will have her travel companion rolling his eyes in mock despair.

After last week's hilarity on the beach in Santa Barbara, Cumming has a further surprise in store at a local "drugs den", but will Margolyes approve? Then it's on to LGBTQ+ friendly Palm Springs for a spot of knitting. Never say these two don't know how to live it up...

Alexander Armstrong in South Korea

9.00pm Channel 5 Catch up via My5

Confronted with a plate of still-wriggling octopus in a Busan fish market, Alexander Armstrong grimaces, pops it in his mouth, chews and swallows. If he is ever asked to be on I'm a Celebrity, he should do it. The bushtucker trials would be a doddle.

In the final part of his South Korean travelogue, he visits Jeju, where he is bashed over the head with a feather duster to cure his insomnia, trudges up "nature's StairMaster" to admire a spectacular if foggy view and keeps his distance from wild dogs.

Despite all that, he leaves enchanted by the country's "creative humanity". JR

Zara McDermott: Disordered Eating

9.00pm BBC3 Catch up via iPlayer Prior to appearing on Love Island, reality-star-turned-TV-presenter Zara McDermott never counted calories. But she started doing so after getting trolled about her appearance. She now posts every day about her diet and exercise regime, but wonders if she's part of a growing problem.

Since the pandemic, the number of people suffering from disordered eating has increased alarmingly, with many citing social media as a contributory factor. McDermott meets people who have been deeply affected by the illness and hears how content like hers can be triggering. The question is, as it's a big source of her income, will she continue to post this content online – or not? KR

COMEDY

Upright

9.00pm, 9.35pm Sky Comedy Catch up via Sky Go/Now

"Hey dkhead. Did you miss me?" It's three years since the debut of this Australian road-trip romp. In the interim, actor Milly Alcock has found fame in House of the Dragon, while comedian Tim Minchin has toured, released an album and worked on the upcoming film version of Matilda.

Now the odd couple reunite as wild child Meg (Alcock) barges back into the life of hard-living rock star Lucky (Minchin). This time, they swap the desert for the rainforest on an epic mission to find Meg's missing mum. Secrets and lies soon emerge. Can Lucky build a relationship with his long-lost daughter? And why is he wearing fluffy pink handcuffs?

Green Lions: Cameroon '90

9.30pm BBC4 Catch up via iPlayer No one expected Cameroon to shine at the 1990 World Cup in Italy. They had only made it to the finals once before, in 1982, when they scored a single goal. And this time they were fielding Roger Milla, a 38-year-old striker who'd been called out of retirement. Many of us thought the Indomitable Lions would be on the first plane home. At least, we did until Africa's only qualifers beat Argentina in their opening game...

Cameroon's joyful progress into the knockout stages – where they faced Gary Lineker's England – is one of the great footballing underdog stories. This doc tells that tale, and looks at how they influenced African football as a whole. CERI THOMAS

GAME SHOW

You Won't Believe This

10.00pm C4 Catch up via All 4

Ellie Taylor is having a busy autumn. Since dancing up a sequinned storm on Strictly Come Dancing – and finding a whole new audience at the same time – the comedian and actor is now adding game-show host to her everexpanding CV.

In this new series, "telling porky pies can fill up your piggy bank". Essentially, think Would I Lie to You? meets Hunted, as contestants turn amateur sleuth to hear jaw-dropping claims from suspects. Did one really go off-grid to live as a mountain goat? Or join a sacrificial cult? They're grilled by police detectives to sift facts from fibs.

If the sleuths spot the truth-teller, they win £5,000. If the blaggers fool them, they walk away with the cash. The interrogation cell makes the BBC ballroom look relaxing. MH

3.30pm World Cup Match of the Day Live

Mexico v Poland
Gabby Logan introduces the action from both teams' opening Group C fixture, which comes from Stadium 974 in Doha (kick-off 4.00).

The Mexicans have been extremely consistent in this tournament, progressing beyond the group stage in the last eight World Cups in which they have participated, but their best showings remain in 1970 and 1986, when they reached the quarter-finals.

Poland finished third in both 1974 and 1982 but have failed to reach the knockout rounds the last three times they have qualified, including in 2018, when they ended bottom of what looked to be a favourable group.

FILM REVIEWS

City Slickers ★★★★ 6.45-9.00pm Film4

COMEDY WESTERN This is a kind of familyfriendly remake of Deliverance, in which three New Yorkers submit to a male-bonding, midlife-crisis-averting cattle drive on horseback from New Mexico to Colorado. The worst fate for executive Billy Crystal, henpecked husband Daniel Stern and salesman Bruno Kirby is embarrassment in front of Jack Palance and his ranch hands. Chaos and humiliation ensue in Ron Underwood's whip-smart fish-out-of-zip-code movie, as the trio discover what's really important in their lives. ANDREW COLLINS (US 1991, edited for content, HD)

Captain from Castile ★★★ 11.45am-2.30pm Talking Pictures TV

OF THE

DAY

ADVENTURE This expansive and sumptuous epic is set around the 16th-century conquest of Mexico by Cortez. A miscast Tyrone Power grows ever more wooden as the tortuous tale of revenge and greed unfurls. However, Cesar Romero more than makes amends in the role of Cortez, in what is overall a diverting and colourful movie. TONY SLOMAN (US 1947)

The File on Thelma Jordon ★★★

12.55-3.00pm Film4

FILM NOIR Barbara Stanwyck plays a murder suspect who works her spell on a hapless assistant DA, played to meek perfection by Wendell Corey. He has her acquitted, but discovers her true motives. Stanwyck has a terrific, deadly allure and the moody lighting and the music conspire with her, keeping the men fluttering around her like moths to a flame. ADRIAN TURNER (US 1949, BW, HD)

The Fast Lady $\star\star\star$ 4.10-6.00pm

COMEDY Despite driving up too many B roads, this story of a civil servant (Stanley Baxter), his car (a Bentley) and the girl on whom he dotes (Julie Christie) has such a degree of fresh-faced innocence that you appreciate the film's charm rather than notice the rambling plot. It's tackled with relish by the cast, which includes the late Leslie Phillips as a car salesman with an eye for the ladies. JOHN MARRIOTT (UK 1963) Leslie Phillips obituary, p9

DRAMA Tony Richardson's take on the iconic 1854 military action that was immortalised by Tennyson is a blistering satire on military incompetence and the British establishment. A failure on release, it is now regarded as a masterpiece, filled with extraordinary set pieces and chillingly funny performances. The charge itself evokes the carnage as pure chaos. AT (UK 1968, violence, racist references)

Man on Fire ★★★

THRILLER In director Tony Scott's movie, burnt-out former US agent Denzel Washington plays bodyguard to a wealthy couple's child (Dakota Fanning) during a wave of kidnappings in Mexico City. The second half showcases some imaginative ultra-violence, though Scott's overreliance on gimmicky visuals occasionally proves distracting. GARETH MOSES (US/UK 2004, violence, swearing, HD)

Charlie's Angels $\star\star$ 11.05pm-1.25am Film4

ADVENTURE This revamped version of the hit 1970s TV series follows a new generation of Angels, played by Naomi Scott, Ella Balinska and Kristen Stewart. Sadly, the freshly minted action heroes become mired in a formulaic story that fails to capitalise on their chemistry. These Angels deserved a more dynamic mission for their debut. JAMES LUXFORD (US 2019, some violence, swearing, HD)

The Mad Room ★★ 12.05-1.55am Talking Pictures TV

DRAMA In this remake of Ladies in Retirement (1941), Shelley Winters plays a rich widow whose housekeeper (Stella Stevens) gets her brother and sister to move in with them. The problem is that the siblings are recently released mental patients who may have murdered their parents. Director Bernard Girard fails to generate much spookiness, but Stevens does well in a rare dramatic role. AT (US 1969, violence)

SOAP Coronation Street

8.00pm ITV1 Catch up via ITV Hub
There have been numerous women in Ken's life. So many, in fact, that a queue of them would probably stretch twice around Weatherfield's
Red Rec. But bohemian Martha Fraser is one of those that stands out, mainly because she sailed away on her canal barge while Ken procrastinated about whether to leave wife Deirdre.

Well, tonight Stephanie Beacham is returning as Martha for the first time since 2009. This reappearance will result in her forming the third side of a love triangle that'll also consist of Ken and his current life companion, Wendy. We can but hope that the two women gang up against the priapic Mr Barlow and leave him humiliated. DAVID BROWN

Over the years, Kirstie Allsopp and Phil Spencer have seen the British property market in all its guises, in good times and bad. Recently, buying a house has become a manic affair, with little on offer and what there is selling at a furious rate. The professional pair have to apply all their nous to get their prospective purchasers what they want.

This week, they're with two sets of first-time buyers in south Manchester. Robyn and Alice would love a classic red-brick house, but would a flat suit them better? And Steph and Christopher are on a losing streak, having already been outbid on ten properties. Can the tables be turned in their favour? GILL CRAWFORD

Portrait Artist of the Year 8.00pm Sky Arts

Catch up via Sky Go/Now

There will be sadness among fans of this evergreen entertainer that the 2022 series is almost over. But the semi-final brings a sky-high standard – plus a surprise from the judges. To the seven heat-winners they have added one more artist that they had wanted to put through. And there are no imposters here: even early marks and daubings look bold and exciting. "I like to start tasteless and take it down from there," says one – but don't believe it for a moment.

Their sparkly yet serene sitter is soul singer Rebecca Ferguson, who is captured photorealistically, in impressionistic head-to-toe and in confident close-up... It should be a scintillating final. MARK BRAXTON

DOCUMENTARY

The Ice Cream Wars

9.00pm BBC2

Both episodes available on iPlayer lce cream vans may seem benign, but in early 1980s Glasgow, various socioeconomic factors saw them at the heart of violent turf wars. This straightforward two-part documentary hears from police, journalists, firefighters and locals – many of whom are still incredibly emotional 40 years on – about what happened when petty rivalries escalated to the point where a blaze was started deliberately at the home of one ice cream seller.

It's a truly shocking and upsetting crime – and, on the surface, it seems to be a clear-cut case. The trail for the second episode, however, indicates that there is even more to this tragic story. FRANCES TAYLOR

9.00pm C4 Catch up via All 4 Unlike its parent show, this presents the finished projects without the drama of building disasters, budget busting and stress. But, whether your ideal home is a lovingly restored farmhouse or a city-based paean to minimalist chic, true property junkies can do without the hysteria. Give us the chance to nose around a London mews house with a stunning timber-clad interior or a Dutch barn with an incredible steel viewing tower attached to it, and we're happy.

Kevin McCloud shows us both of those this evening as well as a Dorset cowshed, two wee flats on the Kyles of Bute and a glass-walled extension in Northamptonshire.

Two Doors Down

10.00pm (11.45pm N Ireland) BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer

Several months on now from Cathy's abrupt departure, Colin is hoping to impress his pals with his new girlfriend. Thus, Siobhan Redmond joins the regular cast as Anne-Marie, a divorcee who is on the fruit-loop side of jolly and desperate to make a good impression with a three-course dinner. With spectacularly rude guests like Christine and Alan ("Egg... in a pie?"), she's got her work cut out.

This programme shows no sign of waning and remains inventive and funny, even when it is again largely a bunch of people sitting around holding forth or raising eyebrows, while the conversation veers from circumcision to Irish dancing.

COMEDY

Outsiders

10pm Dave Catch up via UKTV Play This week's Outsiders is worth watching purely for the music badge challenge, where the comedians must compose a fanfare to herald David Mitchell's arrival into camp. The most impressive is Phil Wang and Fatiha El-Ghorri's hilariously bombastic The Bad Man Mitchell. The funniest, however, is Jessica Hynes and Joe Wilkinson's chorus: "Here he comes, here he comes, what does the pk want now?"

Elsewhere, the incredibly loose post-apocalyptic theme sees the contestants teach a class of children what life was like in the "before times", although admittedly the kids seem far more interested in whether Phil Wang's surname is "rude" or not... STEPHEN KELLY

COOKERY

MasterChef: the Professionals

9.10pm BBC1 Catch up via iPlayer

This is the last week during which we can sit at home smugly judging the professional chefs' attempts at the scary skills tests set by either Marcus Wareing or Anna Haugh. Because we, of course, have the advantage of having heard those two explain exactly how these tasks should be done. We've also learnt that the way the chefs work through the challenge counts with the judges almost as much as the final dish does.

There are varying results. However, one of the contestants impresses in both the skills test and the signature round. "I love, love, love, love your dish," says Gregg Wallace, dancing his little happiness jig. "I think it's absolutely gorgeous," agrees Marcus. Could this chef be on track for the final, I wonder? More tomorrow. JR

Belgium v Canada Gary Lineker introduces coverage of both teams' first Group F match of the tournament from Ahmad bin Ali Stadium in Al Rayyan (kick-off 7.00).

Canada are appearing at a World Cup for the first time since 1986 in Mexico, and are making only their second-ever appearance in the competition. Les Rouges will be looking to do better than their previous showing 36 years ago when they lost all three fixtures.

Their opponents today, however, are looking to improve on their good form over the last two World Cups. Belgium, managed by Roberto Martínez, have reached the quarter-finals and the semi-finals in the last two tournaments, respectively.

Commentary comes from Steve Wilson and Jermaine Jenas. Available in UHD on iPlayer. World Cup Extra on the red button 6.00-10.30. (S) (HD) Viewpoint: page 11; See feature: page 14

FILM REVIEWS

BLACK COMEDY Martin Scorsese directs this exhilarating, fact-based story of decadence and debauchery, which charts the rise and fall of stockbroker Jordan Belfort. Leonardo DiCaprio gives a charismatic, Oscar-nominated lead performance as the man who made millions in the 1990s through fraudulent share trading and stock-price manipulation. Unusually for a Scorsese film, the tone is flat-out black comedy, with farcical X-rated laughs that perfectly offset the savagely funny dialogue. DAMON WISE (US 2013, violence, swearing, sex scenes, drug abuse, nudity, HD)

OF THE

11.00am-1.05pm Film4

WAR John Wayne may not have seen active service, but he did his fair share of fighting on screen in propaganda movies such as this one. He plays the boss of a construction company who orders his workers to take up arms against the invading Japanese. Wayne's hot-headedness causes his buddy's death, leading him to blast his way to glory.

TONY SLOMAN (US 1944, BW, HD)

Canyon Passage ★★★★ 1.55-4.00pm 5 Action

WESTERN This thoughtful frontier melodrama stars Dana Andrews as a man torn between his love of two very different women (Patricia Roc and Susan Hayward), and his loyalty to a friend (Brian Donlevy) with a gambling habit. Director Jacques Tourneur makes wonderful use of the Oregon locations, and his staging of a saloon fight is a highlight. ALLEN EYLES (US 1946, violence)

They Made Me a Fugitive ★★★

3.00-5.00pm Legend

CRIME Trevor Howard heads a strong cast in this story of an ex-RAF pilot for whom things go from bad to worse. This grim, absorbing British film noir was directed by Alberto Cavalcanti, a Brazil-born, Swiss-educated architect and lawyer, who made a number of British films. Influential in its day, it still retains a degree of cinematic interest now.

PETER FREEDMAN (UK 1947, BW)

The Man in the Gray Flannel Suit ★★★ 9.00pm-12.05am

DRAMA In an overlong yet compelling melodrama, Gregory Peck must choose between his family and a high-powered yet time-consuming job. To add to his woes, his marriage to Jennifer Jones comes under threat with the revelation that he fathered a child during the war. The excellent Peck and Jones are joined by Marisa Pavan as Peck's Italian mistress.

ADRIAN TURNER (US 1956, violence)

The Expendables 3 ★★★ 9.00-11.40pm TCM 12

ACTION New to TCM this week, this sequel sees mercenary Sylvester Stallone retiring his ageing crew and recruiting some youthful hotshots to capture arms dealer Mel Gibson. But when the newbies are caught, the "Grey Team" are forced to come to the rescue. There's the usual winning mix of wisecracking banter, explosive mayhem and jokey nods to the action heroes' pasts, with Harrison Ford, Wesley Snipes and Antonio Banderas among the latest sign-ups. ALAN JONES (US 2014, violence, swearing, HD)

P Les Misérables ★★★ 11.55pm-2.00am Film4

DRAMA Spike Lee's Do the Right Thing meets Antoine Fuqua's Training Day in Ladj Ly's exceptional, combustible debut feature. Set in Paris during the aftermath of the 2018 World Cup, it chronicles a day on the Les Bosquets estate. Ly grew up in the self-same neighbourhood, and his insights into the bigotry, poverty and indifference there prove riveting. DAVID PARKINSON (Fr 2019, violence, swearing, HD)

The London Nobody Knows ★★★★ 12.05-1.00am Talking Pictures TV

DOCUMENTARY An air of melancholy pervades this paean to the capital's bygone grandeur. James Mason is our guide for a journey through byways that are far removed from the Swinging London of 1967, when this was filmed. Stop-offs include Kensal Green Cemetery, the ruins of the Bedford Theatre and a public lavatory in Holborn. DP (UK 1967, col/BW)

Emmerdale

7.00pm ITV1 Catch up via ITV Hub
No one in a soap ought to look forward to Christmas, as it's then that secrets are revealed and adulterers get exposed. During November, any roué or rogue can remain confident that big lies will remain under wraps, as show bosses need to engineer their plotlines so that furious showdowns all fall in those hour-long episodes on 25 December.

So, even though we're teased with the prospect of Charity learning that partner Mackenzie is the father of Chloe's baby, there's practically zero chance of the truth coming out. It's the wrong month, turkey isn't yet on the menu, and there's a distinct lack of festive knitwear. Give it four more weeks and things will look very different. DAVID BROWN

DOCUMENTARY

Nothing like a Dame 7.45pm BBC4 Catch up via iPlayer

Never, ever talk down to Dame Judi Dench. A patronising paramedic treated her for a hornet sting and caught the full force of her fury. "He said to me, 'What's our name?' and 'Do we have a carer?' I blew my top! I told him "F off, I've just done eight weeks in A Winter's Tale at the Garrick theatre!"

It's a terrific anecdote, told with indignation and a lot of giggles at a gathering of four great dames – Dench plus Joan Plowright, Maggie Smith and Eileen Atkins – first shown in 2018. It's an unalloyed delight.

Dench can be seen again in Mrs Brown at 9pm, followed by a double dose of Smith with Quartet (at 10.40pm) and Talking Pictures (at 12.15am). ALISON GRAHAM

SCIENCE

The Secret Genius of Modern Life

8.00pm BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer Professor Hannah Fry takes her screwdriver set to an Alexa device, dismantling it to unlock the secrets that enable such virtual assistants, now found in half of UK homes, to function. As she unpicks the way that Alexa, Siri and Google devices listen, speak, process information and communicate with each other, she touches on moments from the history of science that include a Second World War communication device, the development of computers and the villainous HAL from 2001.

Fry's gleeful passion for the cleverness of things is infectious, but she also poses the pertinent question of whether we actually need such devices in our lives. CERI THOMAS

Taskmaster

9.00pm C4 Catch up via All 4

To mark the penultimate episode of this series, Taskmaster's quintet are set one of their daftest challenges yet: how many times within one minute can they snort, blow a raspberry, whistle, then repeat the sequence? Trickier (and far funnier) than it sounds. Other tasks involve ping-pong balls, sausage self-portraits and one-person plays.

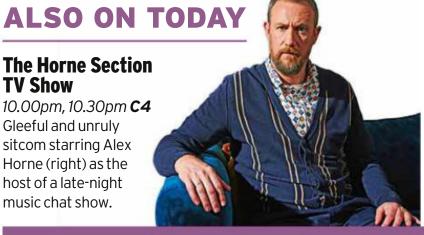

Can Dara O Briain cling onto his slender lead? Can Fern Brady, the only contestant not to win an episode so far, break her duck at last? It's an unusual edition, in that some actual talent is on display. Alex Horne, meanwhile, reveals which surprising foodstuff he's used during sex. And we can only hope he's joking.

How the Other Half Live with Brian Cox

9.00pm Channel 5 Catch up via My5 The divide between the haves and the have nots fascinates and appals Brian Cox. This second programme finds the Succession star in his adoptive country, America, strolling around the comfortable environs of his home patch Brooklyn ("I'm one lucky dude") but determined to see for himself how different life really can be for the mega-rich and the destitute.

In Miami, he pins down the heir to an $8.5 billion fortune, who is visibly embarrassed by his family's wealth; then in Harlem and the Bronx, he speaks to homeless citizens who rely on food banks and charity kitchens. Forthright and empathetic, Cox is "touched to the core" by the people he meets. PATRICK MULKERN

Gangs of London

9.00pm Sky Atlantic Catch up via Sky Go/Now

Once again, this drama shows its ability to be very nasty indeed. The way it focuses and refines nastiness is quite something, like a richly flavoursome jus made with blood and betrayal. Not to everyone's taste, but still impressive.

Criminal kingpin Sean Wallace is making a habit of betraying people. Now he's the victim. A huge heroin shipment gets stolen by Luan. It's no good Sean and co having a monopoly on London's drugs trade if there are no drugs to sell. The solution might be a deal with a French gang boss, so the scene shifts to the civilised streets and clubs of Paris. With the British in town, they don't stay civilised for long. DB showcase with a twist: the acts are interspersed

It sounds promising on paper, but feels half-hearted. Fortunately, the comedians, including Phil Wang and unhinged Aussie stand-up Sam Campbell, salvage it. STEPHEN KELLY

This is a stand-up comedy with sketches, written and performed by the cast of Stath Lets Flats, following the people who run the club. Barman Denzel (Ghosts' Kiell Smith-Bynoe), for example, has introduced table service but has forgotten table numbers, while PR duo Zebedee and Cress (Natasia Demetriou and Ellie White) want to portray the Moth Club as a talent farm, so have hired a cow.

RuPaul's Drag Race UK

9.00pm BBC3 Catch up via iPlayer

For the first time in the franchise's 13-year history, an episode earlier in this series saw head judge and beating heart of Drag Race RuPaul mysteriously physically absent. It meant Michelle Visage stepped into his place alongside Raven, a former contestant from the US series, with RuPaul in Visage's ear watching via video link. It all ended with the shocking elimination of fan favourite Dakota Schiffer, the first trans queen to compete in the UK.

It arguably won't matter how the finalists perform in tonight's final - the winner is simply Ru's favourite. Because despite Visage having had a tiny taste of power, this is very much RuPaul's Drag Race. Tonight he'll make sure she – and we – don't forget it as he crowns the new Drag Race Superstar. FILM REVIEWS

Mrs Brown 5.00-10.40pm BBC4 PG

HISTORICAL DRAMA Judi Dench and Billy

Connolly are a wonderful double act in this blend of fact and fiction. The story examines the relationship between Queen Victoria and her Scottish gillie John Brown, who dispelled her gloom after the death of Prince Albert and with whom she became so close that gossips gave her his name. Dench provides a wonderfully dignified counterbalance to comedian Connolly, and director John Madden oversees an engrossing account of an attachment that might have fulfilled itself romantically had it not been for the conventions of the time. TOM HUTCHINSON (UK/US/Ire 1997, HD)

Rio Diablo ★★★ 2.55-4.50pm Great Movies Action

OF THE

western Not content with robbing a bank and shooting up a town, bandits kidnap a bride on her wedding day, in this TV movie starring a raft of country singers. Bounty hunter Kenny Rogers rides in to help groom Travis Tritt, while Naomi Judd crops up as the owner of a bar. Stacy Keach makes sure that the musicians don't grab all the limelight, giving good value as a heavy. TH (US TVM 1993, violence)

Colonel Effingham's Raid

★★★ 4.50-6.20pm

Talking Pictures TV

COMEDY Charles Coburn is well cast in this minor 20th Century-Fox romp about a returning army officer fighting to preserve his southern town's heritage. Coburn himself was from Savannah, Georgia, and well understood this particular character. He seldom played leads again, but was Oscarnominated two years later for The Green Years. TONY SLOMAN (US 1945, BW) movie" genre stars Robert Redford as travel writer Bill Bryson, who treks the Appalachian Trail with his libidinous old pal (Nick Nolte). The film may fail to do justice to some of America's most spectacular scenery, but the two leads have great chemistry and are hilarious together. KAREN KRIZANOVICH (US 2015, edited for content, HD)

P Bobby Robson: More than a Manager ★★★ 9.00-11.15pm ITV4

DRAMA Dustin Hoffman stepped behind the camera for the first time with this tale of a group of opera singers living in a retirement home. Tom Courtenay, Pauline Collins and Billy Connolly are the residents whose plans for an annual concert are turned upside down when diva Maggie Smith shows up. It's a delightful film that explores the themes of ageing and the enduring importance of art. KK (UK 2012, swearing, HD)

Ready Player One ★★★
11.15pm-1.20am BBC2

SCI-FI Director Steven Spielberg brings Ernest Cline's hit novel to vibrant life, with Tye Sheridan as the young gamer who enters a virtual-reality game in order to solve a puzzle left by its deceased creator (Mark Rylance). While the story may not be terribly involving, the dazzling special effects more than make amends, while Ben Mendelsohn has a blast as the corporate baddie. DOCUMENTARY Agatha Christie: Lucy Worsley on the Mystery Queen 9.00pm (11.05pm Northern Ireland) BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer

Beware spoilers. Not from me, but in the programme itself, which finds Lucy Worsley arguing that you can't understand the works of Agatha Christie without revealing whodunnit. For her, the Queen of Crime was no cosy writer crafting parlour-game mysteries. Rather, Christie subverted the genre of detective fiction, luring readers in with welcoming milieux of country houses or gossipy villages before confounding their expectations in often quite radical ways. A prime example being the ingenious 1926 thriller The Murder of Roger Ackroyd, the intricacies of which Worsley discusses with screenwriter Sarah Phelps.

But where did this flair for narrative fiendishness originate? To answer this question, the historian delves into Christie's childhood, where she discovers that the image of respectability projected by her parents was a mere patina. And that, beneath the surface, the precarious nature of the family's finances resulted in the dreams of a young Agatha being haunted by nightmarish visions of a gunman. Danger and ill deeds, it seems, were Christie's companions from an early age. DAVID BROWN See feature: page 26

SPORT World Cup Football

Wales v Iran 9.15am (kick-off 10am) BBC1, S4C; England v USA 6.05pm (kick-off 7pm) ITV1; highlights 11.30pm (12 midnight N Ireland, 1.40am Scotland) BBC1 Wales will see this as a must-win match if they're to make it to the knockout stages, with Iran sitting just one place below them in 20th place in Fifa's world rankings. Lose it, though, and the final group B match against England takes on even greater importance. If that's possible.

England, meanwhile, will be facing a tough game against the USA at 7pm. Their World Cup record against the Americans is woeful: a loss in 1950 and a 1–1 draw in 2010. This really would be a good time to improve those stats... CERI THOMAS

CURRENT AFFAIRS Unreported World

7.30pm C4 Catch up via All 4

"Should I stay here and accept my fate and just adapt?" wonders 19-year-old Rahaf Shamaly, as she prepares to appear on stage in an underground play. It's a huge question for an aspiring female performer in Gaza. Under the Hamas regime, women over the age of 14 are forbidden from performing in public. If she follows her dream, Rahaf risks arrest and censure.

Reporter Jonathan Miller takes a front row seat as Rahaf tries to find a secret venue. Despite also talking to a choreographer whose female dancers were arrested mid-show and a wannabe cinema manager whose movie house is under threat of being burnt down, Miller emerges hopeful for Gaza's artistic future. DRAMA Death in Paradise

8.00pm BBC1 Catch up via iPlayer Florence (Joséphine Jobert) is laid up with a sprained ankle in this pokerthemed episode from 2018. That means cartoonish constable Dwayne (Danny John-Jules) steps up to take her place, a role he throws himself into rather too lustily. He agrees to a favour for the commissioner addressing a lecture club full of nurses on the life of a cop. But the gathering isn't all he'd hoped for...

And that's what passes for light relief in a plot that slow-plays the case of a top poker player killed at the table. Nigel Planer is among the guest stars as Jack (Ardal O'Hanlon) groans, "We're dealing with a group of suspects who literally make a living out of being unreadable." DAVID BUTCHER

DRAMA Astrid: Murder in Paris The Great Game

9.00pm More4 Catch up via All 4 When a man mysteriously collapses and dies in a pool of blood on a packed bus, forensic scientist Henri Fournier (Husky Kihal) decides he's had enough of "this sick twisted stuff" and would much rather have a simple stabbing or strangulation to investigate. You can understand why he'd think that way, because not only are the circumstances of this death unusual but, as an exasperated Raphaëlle says, "This victim changes

Meanwhile, Astrid is agitated to realise she has a male admirer, and we learn a little more about Raph's upbringing and her history with colleague Nicolas (Benoît Michel). Oh, and they solve the case of course. JANE RACKHAM

CHAT SHOW

9.00pm, 10.00pm Sky Atlantic Catch up via Sky Go/Now

Remember ITV's notorious Noughties WAG drama Footballers' Wives, and its entertainingly villainous players' agent, Hazel Bailey (EastEnders' Alison Newman)? Well, this glossy subtitled import is essentially about her Italian equivalents.

Tonight's double bill sees the series reach the half-time mark, as Corso Manni (Francesco Montanari) makes signings for AC Milan while suppressing a sex tape on behalf of a star player. Corso's ex-wife Elena (Elena Radonicich) announces the merger of family firm ISG with Russian agency Plustar. And Corso makes a shocking discovery about who bribed his father. Hazel wouldn't have stood for this. MICHAEL HOGAN

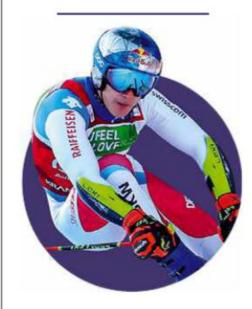

The Graham Norton Show

10.40pm (11.10pm Northern Ireland) BBC1 Catch up via iPlayer

You can always rely on this show to pull in impressive A-list guests, but tonight's line-up is starrier than ever. There's Daniel Craig talking about playing sleuth Benoit Blanc in the Knives Out seguel and Emma Thompson – without the heavy prosthetics needed for her role as the sadistic Miss Trunchbull – chatting about the new film of Roald Dahl's Matilda the Musical.

We also have newsreader and Mastermind host Clive Myrie as well as the always entertaining lan McKellen who, along with fellow guest John Bishop, is performing in Mother Goose. Now there's a sentence I never imagined writing. JR Jane Garvey on the box: page 13

10.00pm BBC2 Catch up via iPlayer TV – and specifically the BBC's centenary – is this week's theme, but you needn't fear that waves of nostalgia could drown the show's trademark wit. They don't. There are plenty of laughs, especially when Alan Davies goes off on a rant about the health-and-safety aspects of how the BBC used to cover live horse racing. "I see Alan's medication has worn off," announces Sandi Toksvig.

However, those of us of a certain age (and who aren't on Alan's medication) will be happily whisked back to our early years by the extraordinary stories about Blue Peter's Petra, the TV Test Card girl and reminders of the potter's wheel interlude and BBC idents. Greg James, Zoe Lyons and Richard Osman do their best not to be overawed when Basil Brush makes an appearance. JR

MASH  9.00-11.25pm Great Movies Action

COMEDY The film that put director Robert Altman on the map, this influential war satire remains daring and provocative. Donald Sutherland and Elliott Gould lead the anarchic antics as medics at a mobile hospital stationed in Korea in 1951, though it's the late Sally Kellerman's committed, Oscar-nominated performance as besieged nurse "Hot Lips" Houlihan that steals the show. This loose, shaggy film is a bit slapdash compared to Altman's later masterpieces, but as a thinly veiled snapshot of Vietnam War-era America, it still takes some beating. CALUM BAKER (US 1969, swearing, drug abuse, brief nudity)

Harry's War ★★★ 1.35-3.30pm Talking Pictures TV

OF THE

COMEDY In this folksy, Frank Capra-style throwback, Edward Herrmann plays the postman who takes a stand against the Internal Revenue Service after it erroneously demands huge back taxes from his aunt, Geraldine Page. Writer/director Kieth Merrill is over-earnest in his celebration of small-town values, but this is pleasantly uplifting entertainment.

The Switch $\star\star\star$ 4.45-6.10pm

U

DAVID PARKINSON (US 1981)

THRILLER Mostly made for buttons, British B-movies have a modest reputation – but this cross-Channel smuggling saga is one of the better ones. Anthony Steel plays a customs officer who liaises with Dermot Walsh's Scotland Yard detective after identical sports cars are stolen from the same mews address. Enlivening the search is Dawn Beret, who is amusingly chirpy as the girlfriend of a short-fused thug. DP (UK 1963, BW)

Dirty Dancing ★★★★ 12 8.00-10.10pm 5 Star

ROMANCE This feel-good dance movie works a curious, charismatic magic, as it tells a story of a young woman's sexual awakening at a Jewish holiday resort in 1963. The casting is perfect, with Patrick Swayze playing a bad-boy dancing coach and Jennifer Grey as the feisty teen. But what really makes the film unmissable is the fabulous dancing – despite being highly erotic, it's never tacky. SUE HEAL (US 1987, edited for content, HD)

Last Christmas ★★ 9.00-10.35pm BBC3

ROMCOM The hits of the sadly departed George Michael provide the musical backdrop to this sentimental seasonal offering. Emilia Clarke gives a charming turn as the shop assistant whose fortunes look up when she falls for too-good-to-be-true Henry Golding. However the film's earnestness comes off as a bit smug, making it more festive folly than Christmas cracker. EMMA SIMMONDS (UK/US 2019, some swearing, HD)

Haunted ★★★ 9.05-11.20pm Talking Pictures TV

THRILLER Right from the Edwardian prologue, an air of malevolence hangs over this tale of murder, madness and memory. Aidan Quinn is marvellous as the sceptic who investigates supernatural goings-on at a stately home. Among the rest of the cast, Kate Beckinsale is a suitably creepy coquette and Anthony Andrews revels in his role as her eccentric brother, but the standout is Anna Massey as a Mrs Danvers-esque nanny. DP (UK/US 1995, a sex scene, nudity)

The Football Factory ★★★ 11.05pm-12.50am C5

DRAMA Director Nick Love's unflinching look at soccer hooliganism portrays a firm of thugs who "support" Chelsea. Decently acted, the film is at its best when things are kept nice and gritty, with Frank Harper in menacing form as an ageing hooligan who's old enough to know better. The crisis of conscience faced by Danny Dver's character is less well handled. DAVE ALDRIDGE (UK 2004, violence, swearing, drug abuse, nudity, HD)

Ghost in the Shell ★★★★ 15 12.40-2.20am Film4

SCI-FI The original animated adaptation of the seminal Japanese manga series gets a rare showing tonight. With its dynamic action, Blade Runner-esque design and cyborg heroine, this is one of the key works in the anime genre. Director Mamoru Oshii creates a moody atmosphere and his fluid visual elegance is matched by Kenji Kawai's haunting music. JASON CARO (Jpn/UK 1995, violence, nudity, HD)

'IT'S A TOUGH JOB'

Bill Bailey always wanted to make people laugh, but when his close friend Sean Lock died he was forced to think again...

Hennikay

Tuesday 6.30pm Radio 4

OR BILL BAILEY, comic, musician, actor, Strictly winner and star of Radio 4 comedy Hennikay, it all started with Les Dawson and a funeral. "An elderly aunt died when I was a child and there was a big wake at our house. We had an upright piano in the front room and I'd learnt a Les Dawson TV routine where he plays a Tchaikovsky piano concerto and he gets all the notes wrong. I remember vividly that my dad was talking in a very concerned way to someone when I hit this bad note and he just spat all his tea out. Then my mum said, 'Oh bugger!' - and she never swore. I realised right then – 'Wow this is good, this is great. This is dynamite!"

That moment eventually led to a career that has been as successful as it was unplanned. "No, not planned at all," the 57-year-old says, speaking from Australia where he's presently touring. "I just keep going merrily along, doing what I'm doing. Whatever happens to come my way is a bonus. I love music and I love comedy."

In Hennikay, Bailey plays middle-aged, Maidstone-based software developer Guy Starling. On the surface one of Solutify Technology's achievers, given to saying "I've got the world in my pants and I'm ready to rumble," in reality Starling, lost in a dismal culture of paintballing and idea hothousing, finds himself wondering, like many of us, just where his life went. Then, at this low ebb, his imaginary childhood friend the invisible Hennikay reappears. Last seen in 1976, the 11-year-old is here to sort everything out, with the proviso that only Starling can see him.

"It's about the idea of an imaginary friend, but also about the way we tamp down the fun of childhood," Bailey says. "Hennikay injects that fun back into Guy's life. He gives him a kick up the arse and says: 'You were great, you had all these plans and they got abandoned, but you're still the same person inside."

Bailey's own childhood near Bath, as the only child of a doting GP father and a mother who "was a great life force, always singing", sounds near idyllic. "I'm not going to be writing some agonising memoir of childhood anytime soon," he admits. "I had very understanding parents. I wrote a lot, I read a lot, I cycled for miles and miles in the local area, just taking my dad's old Ordnance Survey maps." That sounds more like a 1930s childhood than the 1970s. "Yes, but without the imminent threat of war and the Great Depression. I remember playing Pooh sticks over a little stone bridge, getting conkers, building a go-kart, nicking apples from the neighbour's garden, getting caught."

His middle age is pretty happy as well, helped no end by winning Strictly Come Dancing in 2020 – very public proof that nearly everybody in the country likes him. Unlike others, Bailey managed to come through the experience with his reputation enhanced and marriage to Kristin – mother of his 19-year-old son Dax – intact. "Strictly gets a huge amount of attention," he says. "While the show is on, you have that light

JANE ANDERSON'S PICK OF THE WEEK

Archive on 4: Hendrix - Everything but the Guitar Saturday 8.00pm Radio 4

"When people think of Jimi Hendrix, they often think of the guitar – playing it upside down, behind his head, with his teeth, smashing it, setting it alight," says musician, singer, presenter and Hendrix admirer Cerys Matthews.

Hendrix would have been 80 this month and Matthews leads an exploration into what she calls "the many other remarkable layers to the musician and the man". We hear from his younger brother, Leon, about his deep spirituality and belief that music was the means to shift the mind away from the materialistic and towards a more peaceful world.

There's also author Sarita Cannon, who evaluates his role as a mixed-heritage icon, and David Harrington, violinist with Kronos Quartet, who shares his thoughts on Hendrix's skills as a composer and the night his classical ensemble brought the house down with a version of Purple Haze.

But it's still the sound of Hendrix playing the guitar that resonates loudest and longest.

AMBRIDGE DIARY

The Archers this week...

Ruairi continues to struggle with what he really wants from life and, with his client Julianne making more demands, he'll need to protect his more personal prospects.

Away from all the drama at Brookfield, Kenton and Jolene find their hospitality in demand, but might have different ideas on how much support to lend. David hits the roof when a local tries to put the squeeze on his family, and it's all getting too much for Ruth, who's up to her eyeballs with worry about Ben.

Meanwhile, Christmas talk gets two creative types thinking; could sweet music be made, or a contentious klaxon? And someone is making George blush... CAROLINE FROST

Podcas

Edited by DAVID HEPWORTH

In 1965 An enterprising Japanese fashion business sent a team to America. The team was charged with photographing students attending the prestigious universities of the East Coast. The firm wished to use this as a spearhead for their own range of sports clothes. The resulting photo book, named Take Ivy in honour of Dave Brubeck's hit record Take Five, on the pages of which square-jawed, privileged white young men in button-down shirts, shorts and loafers strolled through quadrangles groaning with ivy, has been pored over by fashion experts ever since. Now it's the text at the centre of the new series of Articles of Interest, a podcast that thinks the way we dress is endlessly interesting because it says so much about what we have felt about ourselves over the years.

The look that was outlined in this 1965 publication is, they discover, the default position of much male dress 60 years later. So much for trends. Some call the look preppy. Others prefer to call it American Ivy. As one male devotee explains, the way he feels about this look for men is the way women feel about how French women look. That's the kind of insight that would be hard to find in a network radio programme. At this even the presenter

'The look outlined in 1965 is the default position 60 years later'

Avery Trufelman can't suppress an exclamation of recognition. As an American, she says, she didn't even realise that there was such a thing as an American style, much as she didn't realise she has an American accent.

The inevitable journey ensues. All podcasts have to have a journey and this journey goes back to Japan, where the look began with a dream of the way Americans dressed, a dream that wasn't entirely borne out by closer investigation. It moves forward to hip hop, where a similar look has been adopted by people who are anything but white and privileged. It nods to the rest of us, who don't even realise our style is a style. In the end, the style is not about the clothes so much as the way the clothes are worn, which is why this series should be of interest to people who don't count fashion among their interests. You may not be interested in fashion, but fashion

SHOW OF THE WEEK

ARTICLES OF INTEREST

Created by Avery Trufelman, Articles of Interest covers a broad range of concepts linked to the way we dress and why, including the rise of casual wear, the environmental impact of the textile industry and why womenswear doesn't have pockets. The latest, third series, under the banner American Ivy, explores how the "preppy" look favoured by US students has somehow never gone out of fashion.

THE BOF PODCAST

The acronym stands for "business of fashion". For people within that business, to borrow from Bill Shankly, fashion isn't a matter of life and death, it's more important than that. Recent episodes have covered the latest from the febrile world of the front row at the catwalk shows but also, more interestingly, the "degrowth" philosophy of the fashion brand that wants us to buy less.

THE CUTTING ROOM FLOOR

In the world of fashion the objective is always to be wildly popular, thus ensuring you make money, while maintaining the illusion of exclusivity, thus ensuring you are invited to the cool parties. In this inside-the-business series, the model agent Mina White describes how she stealthily piloted the use of more generously proportioned women through the reefs and shoals of what is, essentially, the most snobbish business on earth.

CONSCIOUS STYLE PODCAST

In which members of the activitist group Fashion Act Now discuss whether it is possible to still have something we would recognise as fashion without having an adverse effect on the planet's resources. Plus, they explore how some human beings work all hours in sweat shops, just so some others can have something cheap to wear on Friday night.

SOMETHING NEW

ALAN CARR: LIFE'S A BEACH

The waspish favourite returns with a new series in which the likes of Paloma Faith and Olly Murs talk about their experiences with travel and holidays. As ever with this kind of format, as with conversation of any kind, it's the asides and tangents that provide the most diverting content. For example, Jamie Carragher's insistence that he's that rarest of things, a former professional footballer without a single tattoo.

Eugenics is a word not everyone knows, and yet it's one of the key ideas that shaped the global history of the 20th century. For those who have heard of it, often it's most closely associated with the Holocaust, and the crimes of the Nazis. But our Radio 4 documentary series reveals that wanting a "desirable" society through selective breeding of the "right type" of person, and involuntary sterilisation of the "undesirable" was not limited to the evil of the Third Reich.

In fact, this now-toxic idea enjoyed widespread and enthusiastic popular support in its birthplace in Victorian Britain and abroad, from cultural luminaries and leaders on the political right and left – people such as Winston Churchill, William Beveridge, DH Lawrence, Marie Stopes and Alexander Graham Bell.

So what is eugenics? In the heat of Victorian ingenuity and the zenith of Empire, Britain's elites were troubled by a rapidly expanding urban poor, and immigration from the growing colonies. The questions of how to curtail the imagined degeneration of the British people and enhance their desirable characters was a big conversation for the ruling classes. They turned to science, and the newly minted ideas of Darwinian evolution. Yet it wasn't Charles Darwin who provided an answer, but his half-cousin, Francis Galton – a data-obsessed, scientific and statistical genius, who was also deeply racist and sexist. Galton figured that as animals and plants could be bred to enhance desirable traits, so should humans. He came up with a statistical framework, drawing on evolutionary thinking, and coined the word "eugenics" – meaning "well born"; a modern interpretation might be "good genes".

The story we tell in Bad Blood is not only the history of eugenics, but also its contemporary legacies. The science of human genetics, my own field, emerged from the political ideology of eugenics. After the horrors of the Holocaust were revealed to the world, eugenics organisations withered, or evolved into genetics labs, and began the process of building a new science that was in service of all people, and not imposed by the powerful upon the poor, the vulnerable and the powerless.

Eugenics never was a science at all. It was merely that the men of power in Victorian Britain turned to new scientific thinking to justify their ideology. And though in Britain we never codified eugenics into law, more than 30 countries did, resulting in the sterilisation of hundreds of thousands, most significantly in Nazi Germany, but also in the USA, where eugenics policies were enacted in the majority of states, for the majority of the 20th century.

his history is recent enough to have been in the age of the recorded audio. We've unearthed a 1930s Hollywood melodrama that alerts women to the perils of marrying the "wrong type" of man. We've dusted off a Third Reich propaganda film, a silly yet sinister tale of a student discovering brutal competition in nature, and this being used as the justification for the killing of people with disabilities in Nazi Germany.

Though regarded as abhorrent today, echoes of this mode of thinking are still with us. We hear President Trump speaking about "good genes" in him and his family, and of the genetic modification of babies to make them fitter, healthier, stronger.

What we set out to do is to remind people that such thinking requires extreme care, because the history of the 20th century shows very clearly how easy it is for science to be martialled into the politics of hate.

Adam Rutherford presents Bad Blood: the Story of Eugenics, Monday 4.30pm Radio 4

Today's Choices

Soul Music

10.30am Radio 4 While the musical choices for this series have always been impeccable (from Song to the Siren to Bruch's Violin Concerto via Some Enchanted Evening from South Pacific), it is the human stories that make this one of the best things on British radio. How on earth do they find people with such powerful connections to a particular piece? The series returns with four tales about the profound effect of Running Up That Hill by Kate Bush (above). Originally released in 1985, it hit the number one slot this June, thanks to its use in the Netflix series Stranger Things. The most moving of today's four accounts is the man who played the track as he ran his first marathon – the day after his mother died. JANE ANDERSON

A View of the City from Westminster Bridge

6.00am/4.00pm Radio 4 Extra

Manny Draycott-Lai's absorbing drama is 30 years old but it feels remarkably up to date in its portrayal of sexual politics and the workplace. We're in the testosterone-fuelled world of an architectural project at the time of the rejuvenation of the London skyline in the early 1990s. Roger Allam is suave big cheese Isambard Jones, Suzanna Hamilton the ambitious young hopeful, Louise Candrell, whose involvement in the project puts her personal life at stake. There's also Ralph Fiennes in one of his last before-they-were-famous roles, and the use of location recording is another satisfying element in a really excellent piece of work. SIMON O'HAGAN

Today's Choices

Heart and Soul

10.30am BBC World Service This is multidisciplinary artist Annie Nicholson with her ice cream van. Annie sees creativity as a catharsis from grief and takes her work on the road, quite literally in the case of the van, and more recently, a skip not far from the site of the World Trade Center memorial in New York. As well as an offering of "one scoop or two" from a delicious range of frozen delights, visitors are encouraged to share their experiences of coming to terms with loss in a range of activities, from writing and reading stories to a "grief rave". This poignant documentary catches up with Annie in New York on the anniversary of the death of three members of her family, when the helicopter they were travelling in crashed into the East River. Her father survived, but later died from cancer, leaving her with a mission to look forwards, never backwards. Jane anderson

Radio 3 in Concert: Sibelius the Storyteller

11.00am/2.00pm/ 7.30pm/9.55pm Radio 3 Universally accepted as one of the 20th century's greatest symphonists, Sibelius hardly seems in need of the BBC SO's "Total Immersion" treatment. But last month's in-depth plunge focused not on his mastery of abstract form but on his equal ability to evoke the myths and legends of his native land. Only enshrined in print in 1835, these folk fables had originally been preserved by word of mouth – in which spirit today's four concerts were all presented as seamless sequences, without intrusive commentary, but with a cast of actors, both British and Nordic, reciting the poems and stories that inspired Sibelius's scores. Today's Choices

Bulldog Drummond 6.30am/1.30pm/8.30pm Radio 4 Extra Decades before Dan Dare, who returned to Radio 4 Extra last week, there was another thoroughly British "sportsman and gentleman" whose deeds of derring-do have stood the test of time. Created by "Sapper" in 1920, Bulldog Drummond appeared on stage, screen and more recently comic books, well into the 21st century. Made for Radio 7 in 2009, Neville Teller's cracking adaptation of the first Drummond novel begins in Berne in 1918. The Great War is not over for a quartet of dastardly foreigners, who plot to leave Britain "grovelling in the dirt". Enter Hugh Drummond, recently demobbed from the Royal Loamshire Regiment, who craves adventure. When he's contacted by a woman with skin like "the bloom of a sun-kissed peach", the game's afoot. Read all this week by Julian Rhind-Tutt. DAVID McGILLIVRAY

The Conversation

11.30am BBC World Service Gambling addiction comes in many forms, but it is often stereotyped as a male affliction. When University of Wisconsin-Madison literature professor Sandra Adell first walked into a casino at the age of 59, she became one of an increasing number of women to get hooked on gambling. For Lisa Walker, it was a £127,000 poker win that fuelled an addiction that left her broke and homeless. Here, both Adell and Walker speak about their devastating experiences and how they are both trying to raise awareness, through books and community outreach work, at a time when the current cost-of-living crisis could put more women at risk of harmful behaviour. Today's Choices

The Exploding Library 11.30am Radio 4

Although billed as a "comedy", this is really a mind-altering and boundary-pushing arts series, where performers with a comic bent are asked to shine a very personal light on their favourite cult book. Today writer, actor, comedian and singer Natasha Hodgson focuses upon The Unconsoled, a 1995 novel about memory, performance and total confusion by Kazuo Ishiguro that followed his highly praised Remains of the Day. This one, however, was met with stinging criticism (some of which we hear in a great archive clip from BBC2's The Late Show) and described as having "invented its own category of badness". Hodgson begs to differ and takes us on a fabulous, funny fever-dream of her own. JANE ANDERSON

When Reality Breaks: Demystifying Paranoid Schizophrenia

Dr Julia Shaw (co-creator of the Bad People podcast) had a breakthrough moment when she started studying psychology at university: those years of living with a father who genuinely believed "they" were out to get him was down to paranoid schizophrenia. In this powerful and important documentary, Shaw speaks with families who serious delusions, and asks what has helped them look after themselves, as well as their loved one. It's an uplifting journey of discovery for Shaw, the listener and anyone who lives with a paranoid schizophrenic. Information and support from outside the family are the key. JANE ANDERSON

Today's Choices

Gossip and Goddesses with Granny Kumar

6.30pm Radio 4

Meera Syal's classic comic creation, the ungracious Granny Kumar (above), returns for a second series of mock interviews with impressive women. Geeta (Harvey Virdi), the friend she scolds and scorns, and great granddaughter Maya (Ambreen Razia) are on hand to chip in to the chat. Their first quest is Casualty and Ackley Bridge star Sunetra Sarker. Outspoken octogenarian Granny Kumar favours blunt questioning and pulls out some strong lines of conversation. Coincidentally, both Sarker and the second guest, Naga Munchetty, talk about having trouble with their names – but this would have been recorded before Naga was recently called Nana by a weather presenter on live television. You can only imagine what Granny Kumar would have to say about that. FIONA HUGHES

The Haunting of Hill House

6.15pm Radio 4 Extra

Shirley Jackson's 1959 novel has been subject to several treatments: two films, both called The Haunting, in 1963 (excellent) and 1999 (appalling), various stage adaptations, a 2018 Netflix series (where the only similarity was the brooding house) and this abridgement for Radio 4 from 1997, which remains entirely faithful to the book. Read by Emma Fielding, this version perfectly captures the terrifying events within the house, without losing sight of the fact we're never entirely sure if it's genuinely ghostly goings-on or a manifestation of the characters' psychological flaws. Stephen King called this one of the best horror novels of the late 20th century and I'm not going to argue with the master. JANE ANDERSON

Today's Choices

Radio 3 in Concert

7.30pm Radio 3

As a doubtless accidental appendix to Sunday's Sibelius the Storyteller, tonight's BBC Scottish SO concert opens with the same work, Tapiola, that closed that day-long marathon, though the mighty Finn's frosty depiction of "the Northland's dusky forests" is here counterbalanced by Vaughan Williams's Fifth Symphony, dedicated to the then long-silent Sibelius, and a surprisingly serene and meditative work to have emerged at the height of the Blitz. In between, Martyn Brabbins, Music Director of English National Opera – the foremost victim of recent Arts Council cuts – conducts Strauss's opulently orchestrated Four Last Songs, featuring soprano Elizabeth Llewellyn (above), winner of the Sir Willard White Trophy at the inaugural Voice of Black Opera competition and, like many another British singer, an artist who first enjoyed success with ENO. MARK PAPPENHEIM

Crossing Continents

11.00am Radio 4, 9.30am/ 8.05pm BBC World Service Crossing Continents - broadcast as Assignment on the World Service – is where some of BBC radio's best journalism can be found, with its intrepid reporting from far-flung corners of the globe, and stories that invariably have global implications. The first episode in a new series is no exception, with John Murphy taking us to the rough seas of the narrow strait between Taiwan and China. Few international relationships are this tense: on the one hand, the Communist behemoth, on the other, the tiny island that both is and is not a part of it. It's astonishing to realise that as recently as the 1970s, China was shelling Taiwan. Could things turn that

Today's Choices

A Capital Case: Karl Marx Meets Sherlock Holmes

10.00am/3.00pm Radio 4 Extra

As befits Britain's brainiest detective, this 2001 Radio 4 drama by David Zane Mairowitz is a cerebral coming together of mighty minds (Holmes, Marx and the anarchist Mikhail Bakunin) and rapier-sharp wit. Who'd think a game of "dialectical poker" would work as a gag? Holmes is repelled by communism and anarchism, but equally in favour of the freedom of speech, so when the precious draft of Marx's revolutionary tract Das Kapital is stolen, the supersleuth is determined to track it down. Along the way he experiences some near-death encounters of his own, but who's trying to kill him – political extremists or the British establishment? This is a glorious romp replete with intellectual derring-do, and a fine cast that includes Robert Bathurst (as Holmes) and Jasmine Hyde as Marx's daughter. JANE ANDERSON

The Mousetrap and Me

2.30pm Radio 4 Extra Agatha's Christie's The Mousetrap is an institution. What's less well known is the 1940s criminal case that inspired the play, at the centre of which was Terry O'Neill, who here tells Louise Elliott his story. He and his older brother, Dennis, were fostered out to Reginald and Esther Gough, who subjected the boys to shocking cruelty. One winter's day, the beating Reginald gave Dennis was so severe the boy died. The case caught Christie's attention and an idea began to germinate. The play is long-lasting, but so are Terry's emotional scars, tempered by the knowledge that this case shaped how we care for vulnerable children today. CHRIS GARDNER

Face behind the voice Aleighcia Scott BBC Radio Wales

Age 29 Current job Presenter of the evening show on BBC Radio Wales (Thursdays, 7pm) since April.

"I really love the show. My parents are massive music fans so I've listened to really eclectic music since I was a kid. I try to incorporate everything I love about music into the three hours and I enjoy getting new music from Wales, Jamaica and all over the world, as well as playing classics. I love the idea that people will listen to the show and feel better." CV Born in Rumney, Cardiff, she is the grandchild of Windrush migrants from Jamaica, who settled in Wales in the 1960s. She began performing at the age of seven at a youth club in Cardiff's Riverside Warehouse. "Going there made me realise I loved performing all aspects of music." At St David's College, Cardiff, she studied performing arts, sociology and English literature. She then worked as a teaching assistant in a school for autistic children before becoming a full-time musician in 2015. She had a residency at a Caribbean restaurant for three years, and was voted Best Local Artist by Radio Cardiff. Then in 2018, she became part of the BBC Wales Horizons artist development programme (led by Radio Wales presenter Bethan Elfyn), and her first EP, Forever in Love, was released. Her next album, Windrush Baby, is due out next spring. "I tweeted that I would love to do a reggae show on BBC Radio Wales. A lot of people shared it, so the boss said, 'Come in, let's give it a go.' I had a Christmas Day special – that was my first solo radio show. Then I covered for somebody else a couple of times and they asked me if I wanted my own show."

Social media - yes or no?

"It depends. For me it's a really good tool for letting people know what's happening and sharing your music and that kind of stuff.

But also it can be a scary place, so you have to be mindful of what you use it for."

Best moments "Do you know, there have been so many times that I've sat in my seat, ready to start a show, and I've had a little tear in my eye – because being able to have the show is my best moment. It's an honour for me to be able to play music I love to a whole nation and beyond."

'I love the idea that people will listen to the show and feel better?

Worst moments "I've been doing sessions in Jamaica. A couple of weeks ago I pressed 'play' - and there were 40 seconds of silence! So I've learnt to make sure the engineer has a back-up."

Off air Still lives with her family in Rumney, but is hoping to buy a place of her own next year.

First radio memory "Me and one of my older brothers had a hi-fi system that you could put a tape in. I would've been about five or six. We would record ourselves. play music in between and pretend we were radio hosts."

Favourite broadcasters "I love David Rodigan. Trevor Nelson is an absolute legend. I love Nadia Jae – she does breakfast on Radio 1Xtra. Bethan Elfyn – a champion for Welsh women and people all over. And Huw Stephens, who does the Radio Wales evening show from Monday to Wednesday, of course!

Ambition/Dream job "I just love what I'm doing at the moment. I feel that, wherever that takes me, it's where I'm supposed to be."

Secret skills "I was a premature baby – just over two pounds when I was born – and the doctor said, 'She will only ever be small...' I'm 5' 11!" DAVID McGILLIVRAY

BBC Local Radio

Face behind the voice Aleighcia Scott BBC Radio Wales

Age 29 Current job Presenter of the evening show on BBC Radio Wales

(Thursdays, 7pm) since April.

"I really love the show. My parents are massive music fans so I've listened to really eclectic music since I was a kid. I try to incorporate everything I love about music into the three hours and I enjoy getting new music from Wales, Jamaica and all over the world, as well as playing classics. I love the idea that people will listen to the show and feel better." CV Born in Rumney, Cardiff, she is the grandchild of Windrush migrants from Jamaica, who settled in Wales in the 1960s. She began performing at the age of seven at a youth club in Cardiff's Riverside Warehouse. "Going there made me realise I loved performing all aspects of music." At St David's College, Cardiff, she studied performing arts, sociology and English literature. She then worked as a teaching assistant in a school for autistic children before becoming a full-time musician in 2015. She had a residency at a Caribbean restaurant for three years, and was voted Best Local Artist by Radio Cardiff. Then in 2018, she became part of the BBC Wales Horizons artist development programme (led by Radio Wales presenter Bethan Elfyn), and her first EP, Forever in Love, was released. Her next album, Windrush Baby, is due out next spring. "I tweeted that I would love to do a reggae show on BBC Radio Wales. A lot of people shared it, so the boss said, 'Come in, let's give it a go.' I had a Christmas Day special – that was my first solo radio show. Then I covered for somebody else a couple of times and they asked me if I wanted my own show."

Social media - yes or no?

"It depends. For me it's a really good tool for letting people know what's happening and sharing your music and that kind of stuff.

But also it can be a scary place, so you have to be mindful of what you use it for."

Best moments "Do you know, there have been so many times that I've sat in my seat, ready to start a show, and I've had a little tear in my eye – because being able to have the show is my best

I love the idea that people will listen to the show and feel better?

Worst moments "I've been doing sessions in Jamaica. A couple of weeks ago I pressed 'play' - and there were 40 seconds of silence! So I've learnt to make sure the engineer has a back-up."

Off air Still lives with her family in Rumney, but is hoping to buy a place of her own next year.

First radio memory "Me and one of my older brothers had a hi-fi system that you could put a tape in. I would've been about five or six. We would record ourselves. play music in between and pretend we were radio hosts."

Favourite broadcasters "I love David Rodigan. Trevor Nelson is an absolute legend. I love Nadia Jae – she does breakfast on Radio 1Xtra. Bethan Elfyn – a champion for Welsh women and people all over. And Huw Stephens, who does the Radio Wales evening show from Monday to Wednesday, of course!

Ambition/Dream job "I just love what I'm doing at the moment. I feel that, wherever that takes me, it's where I'm supposed to be."

Secret skills "I was a premature baby – just over two pounds when I was born – and the doctor said, 'She will only ever be small...' I'm 5' 11!" DAVID McGILLIVRAY

BBC Radio Scotland

Face behind the voice Aleighcia Scott BBC Radio Wales

Age 29 Current job

Presenter of the evening show on BBC Radio Wales (Thursdays, 7pm) since April.

"I really love the show. My parents are massive music fans so I've listened to really eclectic music since I was a kid. I try to incorporate everything I love about music into the three hours and I enjoy getting new music from Wales, Jamaica and all over the world, as well as playing classics. I love the idea that people will listen to the show and feel better." CV Born in Rumney, Cardiff, she is the grandchild of Windrush migrants from Jamaica, who settled in Wales in the 1960s. She began performing at the age of seven at a youth club in Cardiff's Riverside Warehouse. "Going there made me realise I loved performing all aspects of music." At St David's College, Cardiff, she studied performing arts, sociology and English literature. She then worked as a teaching assistant in a school for autistic children before becoming a full-time musician in 2015. She had a residency at a Caribbean restaurant for three years, and was voted Best Local Artist by Radio Cardiff. Then in 2018, she became part of the BBC Wales Horizons artist development programme (led by Radio Wales presenter Bethan Elfyn), and her first EP, Forever in Love, was released. Her next album, Windrush Baby, is due out next spring. "I tweeted that I would love to do a reggae show on BBC Radio Wales. A lot of people shared it, so the boss said, 'Come in, let's give it a go.' I had a Christmas Day special – that was my first solo radio show. Then I covered for somebody else a couple of times and they asked me if I wanted my own show."

Social media - yes or no?

"It depends. For me it's a really good tool for letting people know what's happening and sharing your music and that kind of stuff.

But also it can be a scary place, so you have to be mindful of what you use it for."

Best moments "Do you know. there have been so many times that I've sat in my seat, ready to start a show, and I've had a little tear in my eye – because being able to have the show is my best

• I love the idea that people will listen to the show and feel better?

Worst moments "I've been doing sessions in Jamaica. A couple of weeks ago I pressed 'play' - and there were 40 seconds of silence! So I've learnt to make sure the engineer has a back-up."

Off air Still lives with her family in Rumney, but is hoping to buy a place of her own next year.

First radio memory "Me and one of my older brothers had a hi-fi system that you could put a tape in. I would've been about five or six. We would record ourselves, play music in between and pretend we were radio hosts."

Favourite broadcasters "I love David Rodigan. Trevor Nelson is an absolute legend. I love Nadia Jae – she does breakfast on Radio 1Xtra. Bethan Elfyn – a champion for Welsh women and people all over. And Huw Stephens. who does the Radio Wales evening show from Monday to Wednesday, of course!

Ambition/Dream job "I just love what I'm doing at the moment. I feel that, wherever that takes me, it's where I'm supposed to be." Secret skills "I was a premature baby – just over two pounds when I was born – and the doctor said, 'She will only ever be small...' I'm 5' 11!" DAVID McGILLIVRAY

BBC Radio Ulster

Face behind the voice Aleighcia Scott BBC Radio Wales

Age 29 Current job Presenter of the evening show on BBC Radio Wales (Thursdays, 7pm) since April.

"I really love the show. My parents are massive music fans so I've listened to really eclectic music since I was a kid. I try to incorporate everything I love about music into the three hours and I enjoy getting new music from Wales, Jamaica and all over the world, as well as playing classics. I love the idea that people will listen to the show and feel better." CV Born in Rumney, Cardiff, she is the grandchild of Windrush migrants from Jamaica, who settled in Wales in the 1960s. She began performing at the age of seven at a youth club in Cardiff's Riverside Warehouse. "Going there made me realise I loved performing all aspects of music." At St David's College, Cardiff, she studied performing arts, sociology and English literature. She then worked as a teaching assistant in a school for autistic children before becoming a full-time musician in 2015. She had a residency at a Caribbean restaurant for three years, and was voted Best Local Artist by Radio Cardiff. Then in 2018, she became part of the BBC Wales Horizons artist development programme (led by Radio Wales presenter Bethan Elfyn), and her first EP, Forever in Love, was released. Her next album, Windrush Baby, is due out next spring. "I tweeted that I would love to do a reggae show on BBC Radio Wales. A lot of people shared it, so the boss said, 'Come in, let's give it a go.' I had a Christmas Day special – that was my first solo radio show. Then I covered for somebody else a couple of times and they asked me if I wanted my own show."

Social media - yes or no?

"It depends. For me it's a really good tool for letting people know what's happening and sharing your music and that kind of stuff.

But also it can be a scary place, so you have to be mindful of what you use it for."

Best moments "Do you know, there have been so many times that I've sat in my seat, ready to start a show, and I've had a little tear in my eye – because being able to have the show is my best

• I love the idea that people will listen to the show and feel better?

Worst moments "I've been doing sessions in Jamaica. A couple of weeks ago I pressed 'play' - and there were 40 seconds of silence! So I've learnt to make sure the engineer has a back-up."

Off air Still lives with her family in Rumney, but is hoping to buy a place of her own next year.

First radio memory "Me and one of my older brothers had a hi-fi system that you could put a tape in. I would've been about five or six. We would record ourselves, play music in between and pretend we were radio hosts."

Favourite broadcasters "Hove David Rodigan. Trevor Nelson is an absolute legend. I love Nadia Jae – she does breakfast on Radio 1Xtra. Bethan Elfyn – a champion for Welsh women and people all over. And Huw Stephens. who does the Radio Wales evening show from Monday to Wednesday, of course!

Ambition/Dream job "I just love what I'm doing at the moment. I feel that, wherever that takes me, it's where I'm supposed to be."

Secret skills "I was a premature baby – just over two pounds when I was born – and the doctor said, 'She will only ever be small...' I'm 5' 11!" DAVID MCGILLIVRAY

Live commentary on the big

Age 29 Current job Presenter of the evening show on BBC Radio Wales (Thursdays, 7pm) since April.

"I really love the show. My parents are massive music fans so I've listened to really eclectic music since I was a kid. I try to incorporate everything I love about music into the three hours and I enjoy getting new music from Wales, Jamaica and all over the world, as well as playing classics. I love the idea that people will listen to the show and feel better." CV Born in Rumney, Cardiff, she is the grandchild of Windrush migrants from Jamaica, who settled in Wales in the 1960s. She began performing at the age of seven at a youth club in Cardiff's Riverside Warehouse. "Going there made me realise I loved performing all aspects of music." At St David's College, Cardiff, she studied performing arts, sociology and English literature. She then worked as a teaching assistant in a school for autistic children before becoming a full-time musician in 2015. She had a residency at a Caribbean restaurant for three years, and was voted Best Local Artist by Radio Cardiff. Then in 2018, she became part of the BBC Wales Horizons artist development programme (led by Radio Wales presenter Bethan Elfyn), and her first EP, Forever in Love, was released. Her next album, Windrush Baby, is due out next spring. "I tweeted that I would love to do a reggae show on BBC Radio Wales. A lot of people shared it, so the boss said, 'Come in, let's give it a go.' I had a Christmas Day special – that was my first solo radio show. Then I covered for somebody else a couple of times and they asked me if I wanted my own show."

Social media - yes or no?

"It depends. For me it's a really good tool for letting people know what's happening and sharing your music and that kind of stuff.

But also it can be a scary place, so you have to be mindful of what you use it for."

Best moments "Do you know. there have been so many times that I've sat in my seat, ready to start a show, and I've had a little tear in my eye – because being able to have the show is my best be able to play music I love to a whole nation and beyond."

Worst moments "I've been doing sessions in Jamaica. A couple of weeks ago I pressed 'play' - and there were 40 seconds of silence! So I've learnt to make sure the engineer has a back-up."

Off air Still lives with her family in Rumney, but is hoping to buy a place of her own next year.

First radio memory "Me and one of my older brothers had a hi-fi system that you could put a tape in. I would've been about five or six. We would record ourselves, play music in between and pretend we were radio hosts."

Favourite broadcasters "Hove David Rodigan. Trevor Nelson is an absolute legend. I love Nadia Jae – she does breakfast on Radio 1Xtra. Bethan Elfyn – a champion for Welsh women and people all over. And Huw Stephens, who does the Radio Wales evening show from Monday to Wednesday, of course!"

Ambition/Dream job "I just love what I'm doing at the moment. I feel that, wherever that takes me, it's where I'm supposed to be." Secret skills "I was a premature

baby – just over two pounds when I was born – and the doctor said, 'She will only ever be small...' I'm 5' 11!" DAVID McGILLIVRAY advice and trademark boob-grabbing earned them reputations as telly's most ruthless fashionistas. But, according to Constantine, the show would certainly fail if it was made today.

"It was of its time and came along at the right moment, but it wouldn't work today and I can understand why. People are fed up of being told what to do," she explains, and then describes as "exhausting" the need these days to be much more aware of causing offence.

Does she look back at those days and feel discomfort about how harshly she and Woodall critiqued the wardrobes of people who appeared on the programme? "No, because genuinely both Trinny and I say this - there's not one person who regretted coming on our show, not one." But there is one caveat... "The one thing I do regret was when Jo Brand did our show. I'm really ashamed, looking back. I have little whiskers on my chin, which I pluck, and she had a little whisker on her chin, which I plucked and it really offended her. I felt terrible about that."

Penning her memoir Ready for Absolutely Nothing forced the former style guru to confront plenty of shortcomings from her past, including a propensity to "collect people instead of things"

Jo Brand was really offended on our show - I'm so ashamed'

- note the chapter detailing her obsession with Scissor Sisters frontman Jake Shears, being haunted by her lack of humility after declining Mario Testino's offer to take her engagement photos and the impact her years of alcoholism had on her family, particularly her children, Joe, 23, Esme, 21, and Cece, 19.

Constantine has been now been alcohol-free for seven years, notwithstanding two relapses, which she describes as "amazing for me, not for anyone else". Constantine is sitting in her kitchen at the 127-acre property in rural West Sussex that she shares with her children and Sten Bertelsten, 58, her Danish husband of 27 years. There are a plethora of half-full bottles of wine and spirits around her home, but she insists she's no longer at risk of temptation, because the rewards of sobriety are too precious to lose.

"I see the world now," she says. "I see the little things. I'm much more efficient, more present and my life is completely different. Not in how I live but how I perceive my life, how I see what's around me and the gratitude I have for even the tiny things."

Constantine takes anti-anxiety medication but being teetotal means her triggers – anything from being "caught out telling a little white lie" or helping her kids through problems ("I'm very codependent with their emotions") – are these days less likely to push stress into anxiety. And although parenting pressures often leave her feeling overwrought, she thrives on being needed.

"Motherhood consolidates my worth within my family. There are times when I think Sten is a much better father than I am a mother, so then I'll cook something amazing to try and make myself feel better about it! I'm a good mum, although I'm a bit of a pushover."

It's in her role as mother and wife where Constantine feels her truest sense of self, she says – and it was always her dream "to live in the countryside in a house that we didn't have to lock, that welcomed everybody".

In her 20s, Constantine lived a different kind of dream, as the long-term girlfriend of Viscount David Linley, the son of Princess Margaret. During their six-year relationship she enjoyed a fairy-tale lifestyle: dinners hosted by the princess at Kensington Palace and holidays at her home, Les Jolies Eaux, on the Caribbean

Queen, a Concorde trip around

In Constantine's book, hilarious anecdotes featuring Princess Margaret are the most entertaining, including the time she rescued Constantine during a toilet dilemma at a private lunch at London's Royal Naval College, and an evening at a Mustique drinks party when Constantine distracted the princess by repeatedly flashing her breasts. "What adult could you do that with?" says Constantine with a chuckle. "I could say anything to her and was so at ease in her company. I felt safe with her. There was a tremendous loyalty between us and I loved her very fiercely."

The depth of Constantine's adoration for Princess Margaret is put into context when you consider her mother's physical and emotional absence. Mary-Rose Constantine, a depressive and an alcoholic, prioritised social gatherings and overseas business trips with her Old Etonian husband Joseph over raising Constantine and her elder sister Annette.

onstantine harbours no ill will towards either of her parents, both of whom are now dead. "They tried their best and gave us an amazing upbringing," she says. "We were privileged. We didn't want for anything and where their shortcomings were, they found people to fill those holes."

During her high-profile relationship with Linley, Constantine frequented the private London members' clubs Annabel's and Tramp and built a circle of famous party pals, including Mick Jagger, Dodi Al Fayed – and Ghislaine Maxwell, who last year was sentenced to 20 years in prison for procuring teenage girls for the sex offender Jeffrey Epstein to abuse.

"To have known someone or met someone, and then to wind the movie forward and for this [to be] happening is really shocking," reflects Constantine. "She seemed like a sweet person, and quite insecure, but there's almost a sense of guilt in a way. It's like, 'Did I miss something?' But, no, there was nothing."

One friendship that has stood the test of time is with beauty entrepreneur Woodall, and it is a relationship that Constantine cherishes deeply. "There's a real honesty between us, which breeds trust. I would trust her, my children and my husband with my life," she says. "It's the same as any relationship, it's the same as a marriage – the key to a long-lasting friendship is acceptance." An acting legend laid bare

Man or myth? Discover the real Richard Harris

RICHARD HARRIS: RAISING HELL AND REACHING FOR HEAVEN The Ghost of Richard Harris, Saturday 9pm Sky Arts When the actor Richard Harris

first met journalist Joe Jackson in 1987, they didn't get on, as Jackson's probing questions delved too deeply for Harris's liking. They reconciled, however, and became such good friends that Harris asked Jackson to write his biography. Over the years the pair sat down together many times and recorded their conversations, and Richard Harris: Raising Hell and Reaching for Heaven (Merrion Press, £22.99, out 25 November) is the result. Part memoir and part entries from Jackson's journals, it paints a deeply personal portrait of the man behind the tag of "legendary actor". See feature page 22

NOW'S THE TIME TO...

Prepare for winter

"Putting the garden to bed" isn't what it used to be - let nature do its work

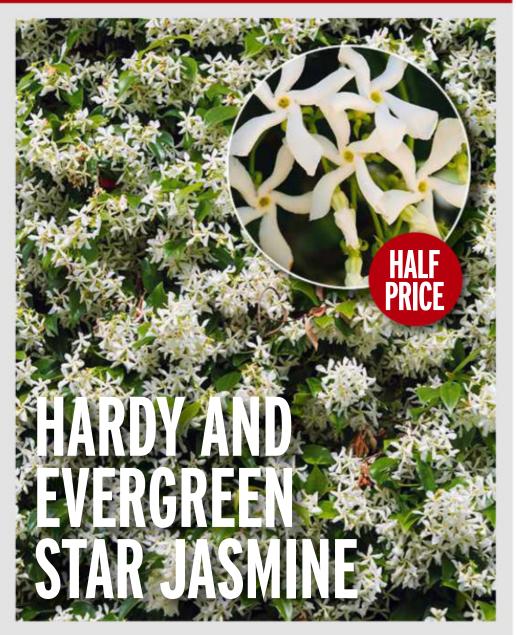

How gardening practices have changed, with sustainability and wildlife much more in mind. It used to be that gardeners would rush to "winterise" everything - and certainly, some tasks can be done now. But remember that everything we do has a knock-on effect on wildlife, so don't be in a rush to tidy up!

- Fallen leaves It's best to rake them up off lawns, as they can encourage fungal diseases, and leaf mould is a doddle to make (see my column of two weeks ago). I leave deciduous leaves on beds and let the worms do the work.
- Dividing and moving Autumn's a fine time for dividing hardy perennials. Large clumps can be lifted and divided (into fist-sized chunks – keep the young vigorous growth) and popped into gaps in borders. Small shrubs can easily be lifted and moved if they're in the wrong spot.
- Cutting back perennials and grasses Heave perennials untouched as they add interest and offer protection to wildlife. Grasses, too, often look their best in winter. If a perennial gets too messy for you, cut it back to the ground.
- Mulching Done year on year, mulching turns a poor soil into a fertile, moisture-retentive one. Use well-rotted horse manure, composted bark (pictured above), home-made compost, leaf mould or mushroom compost. The key is not to skimp. Mulch beds to around 50mm, and avoid piling it up against woody stems.
- Ponds Cut back overhanging foliage to stop it falling into the water, as the rotting leaves will make it smell and reduce the water quality. Cover small ponds with a fine net. Job done!

karaoke bars. Soaring skyscrapers. The Japanese capital is an intoxicating experience, right? Well, it's not quite so simple if you're young American journalist Jake Adelstein.

New BBC1 drama Tokyo Vice – starring Ansel Elgort (as Adelstein), Ken Watanabe and Academy Award nominee Rinko Kikuchi – is based on the real-life reporter's first-hand experience covering the Tokyo Metropolitan Police beat in the 1990s. As you'll see on screen, Adelstein's Tokyo was a gritty whirlwind of seedy hostess clubs, brushes with yakuza mafia, and systemic corruption. Thankfully for visitors, modern Tokyo puts on an equally exciting, but much less dangerous, face. You'll still find plenty of drama, but of a much more enticing kind...

TOKYO BY NIGHT

Far from Adelstein's version of Tokyo, your afterdark experience will be all about fun and glamour. As this hard-working capital hits clock-off hour, rather than winding down it thrums with excitement.

Half an hour before sunset, take the elevator up the Tokyo Skytree tower, where viewing decks peak at 450m above the ground. As the sun slips down and the city flickers into action in a sea of sparkling lights, watch the golden sky backlight distant Mount Fuji.

You could sip fizz here if you're feeling flash – there's a restaurant a few floors down – but given cocktail bars are a Tokyo specialty, better to head elsewhere. The New York Bar in the Park Hyatt hotel holds cult status for its appearance in 2003's Lost in Translation (and great jazz) but it's far from the only option. Bar Oak in the Tokyo Station Hotel has the kind of moody atmosphere made for savouring fine Japanese whiskey, while at intimate Gen Yamamoto you can enjoy an innovative cocktail-tasting flight.

Looking for a dash of Tokyo Vice-style grit? Shinjuku's Golden Gai was once a red-light district, but these days it's a tourist-friendly grid of hundreds of tiny drinking holes, many only large enough to host a few customers at a time.

Of course, there's more to Tokyo nights than booze. You can shop till late in retail district Shibuya – home to the famous, frenetic Shibuya Crossing. Fashion megashop Shibuya 109 is open until 9pm, music and book store Tsutaya until 10pm, and eclectic Don Quijote hawks everything from fancy dress outfits to beauty products 24/7.

Nearby, spa Thermae-Yu is open around the clock, too, so you can ease yourself into a traditional Japanese onsen hot spring as midnight strikes. Or sign up for one of Tokyo's most traditional night-time pursuits: karaoke. Bars with private singing booths can be found around the city, but late-night venues are especially prolific in electric night-life hub Kabukicho (an area featured in Tokyo Vice). Sign up for as little as an hour, or all night long, at chains such as Uta Hiroba; song options are bountiful, and food and drink is free-flowing.

'Today's Toyko is super-safe, welcoming and accessible'

Kabukicho also happens to be one of Tokyo's prime spots for late-night cheap eats. Choose from the range of smoky izakaya (bars), okonomiyaki (savoury pancake) grills, ramen joints and barbecue restaurants to fuel you for an evening of singalongs.

Or, should budgets allow, strike out to elegant Ginza or Otemachi. Tokyo is one of the world's most Michelin-awarded cities, with everything from intimate £300-a-head sushi bars to elegant French fine-dining. Of the ten restaurants and bars found in the elegant Palace Hotel Tokyo, overlooking the city's imperial gardens, two have Michelin star ratings. And if

WHAT'S IN YOUR

PENSION POT?

If you think your company pension will rise with inflation you might be in for a surprise, says Paul Lewis pensions that rise each year with inflation may believe they are protected from its ravages. Sadly, they are not. These pensions pay a proportion of your salary to you for life once you retire. But only part of it normally increases at all, and not always with inflation.

The law says that any pension payment calculated on your working time from April 1997 to April

'Pension payments rise annually, but with a cap'

2005 must be raised annually with inflation – but with a cap of five per cent. That's less than half the current rate. Worse, the cap in the rise for pensions earned and paid for at work from April 2005 is half that – just 2.5 per cent. As for pensions earned before April 1997, forget it: there's no legal obligation to raise them each year at all.

So if you have a pension from a job where you worked for 40 years, some may be flat-rate, some raised each year by up to 2.5 per cent and the rest by no more than five per cent. Yet inflation is expected to be over ten per cent well into next year. Individual pension schemes can decide to raise pensions by more than these caps. Some have extended inflation-proofing backwards to cover pre-1997 pensions. Others raise them by more than one or other of the caps, especially when inflation is very high. But if your pension gets into trouble and is bought by an insurance company or taken over by the Government's Pension Protection Fund then any annual rises will normally be cut to the minimum the law allows.

THE RULES ARE different for most schemes in public sector jobs such as the NHS, police, teachers and civil servants. Those pensions will rise with inflation, though usually using the lower measure of that: the Consumer Prices Index or CPI.

If you saved up into a money purchase scheme (also called a defined contribution scheme, personal pension or SIPP), then at pension age you may have used the fund you had saved to buy an income for life, called an annuity. The most popular are flat-rate with no inflation rises. But if you chose to buy one that goes up each year you'll feel very lucky at the moment!

Word of the week sneezing

English has often evolved through mistakes. The Jerusalem artichoke, for example, has nothing to do with the Holy City and more to do with the fact that English speakers struggled with the Italian girasole, "sunflower". As the Italian sounded a bit like "Jerusalem", we used that instead. A "nickname", meanwhile, was first an "eke-name", or "additional name". Through a process known as rebracketing, the "n" when spoken seemed to belong to the "eke", so migrated over to form an entirely different word. When it comes to "sneezing", we should be "fnesing" – far more evocative of a blocked nose. It's thought that the change in initial letters in the 15th century was due to misreadings of the lowercase "f" for the old-fashioned "long S" character, f.

HOME-GROWN ITALIAN

I cannot agree with Eddie Walker (Feedback, 5 November) regarding the London episode of Stanley Tucci's excellent series, Searching for Italy (BBC2). It was an act of inspiration to include London rather than another Italian location, as he found a large and vibrant Italian community there.

The programme showed wonderful shots of our capital, which Tucci (a resident of London for ten years) said is his favourite city. The restaurateurs he met were varied, interesting and creative, and it was great to see how they had embraced London. A brilliant episode in an excellent series.

HIDDEN TRÉSOR!

Without Radio Times making the drama Astrid: Murder in Paris (Friday More4) a pick of the day, I wouldn't have discovered it. Not just a convoluted series of murder mysteries, not just an evocation of life for someone with autism, their hidden and misunderstood talents and the struggles of the rest of us to understand, but for me, having worked in Paris during the 1990s, it was a reminder of my temporary home city. Bravo.

Peter Radley Hertford

TOO BRUTAL FOR BATES

I wish to express my sadness at the direction The Larkins (Sunday ITV1) has taken. Machine guns, young men with flick knives and the hatred of the Jerebohm family towards the Larkins have no place in the gentle, funny stories written by HE Bates about a family living in a small village in rural Kent.

We live in violent and brutal times. Why on a Sunday night does ITV feel it desirable to introduce to The Larkins such unpleasant people with their cruel behaviour?

Paul Sewell

Sevenoaks, Kent

Well done to Jamie Oliver for his Jamie's £1 Wonders (31 October C4), full of tasty, inexpensive meals in these eye-wateringly inflationary times. A meat loaf as an alternative to a roast and adding tinned lentils to bulk up a casserole were great ideas. The underrated microwave has come into its own, for anything from heating up leftovers to steaming a pudding in a cup.

With his enthusiasm for making cooking fun, his zeal for keeping us healthy and making us savvy shoppers, he is a national treasure. From his Naked Chef days to his campaign to get youngsters to eat more veg (even dressing up as one) and his latest one-pan programmes, he seems unstoppable. Isabel Hopgood Swansea

PET PROJECT

With reference to the interview with Petula Clark (Feedback, 5 November): in the early days of Channel 4

I was the director of a series based on Miles Kington's books, Let's Parler Franglais! The episode called La Eurovision Song Contest starred Petula Clark, Cliff Richard and Angela Rippon, a starry line-up that combined to reveal Petula's innate sense of humour and comic timing.

Fortunately, it's still available on YouTube and is, I would modestly suggest, well worth viewing.

RADIO PIONEERS

Congratulations to the BBC on its 100th birthday!

I am 101 years old and my father built his own radio with glowing valves inside. I remember the earphones feeling really hard on my ears. The radio had a long wire to a pole at the end of the garden as the aerial - we had really good reception. Over the past 100 years, radio, then TV, has been a great comfort to me.

Olive Walker Stokesley, N Yorkshire

POINT DEDUCTED

Please could the BBC deduct a point from Brain of Britain question-master Russell Davies for asserting that the Isle of Wight is "part of Hampshire" (7 November Radio 4)?

Jamie Oliver at the

vegetables

It certainly is not. The island has its own unitary authority and MP and was separated from Hampshire in 1890.

Badly done, Brain of Britain! You need to check your facts.

Allie Somerville

Newport, Isle of Wight The Brain of Britain team responds: "We can only hold our hands up and admit an error... Fortunately this was an aside and didn't affect a correct answer or anyone's score, but we'll certainly be deducting ourselves a point and we'll try to be more careful in future!"

BRILLIANT BETTANY

What an absolute delight Paris to Rome with Bettany Hughes was (Channel 5).

She reminds me of a favourite history teacher at school, who can make the stories of the past come alive; she has a unique ability to entertain and inform at the same time. Let's have more of the brilliant Bettany.

LOVED IT...

Jane Garvey's comments (RT, 12 November) on the excellent series SAS Rogue Heroes (Sunday BBC1/iPlayer) show that she just didn't get it. She said, "In no way is this a history lesson. I do hope no one thinks it is." She needs to watch Ben Macintyre's brilliant documentary series SAS: Rogue Warriors and read his book, SAS: Rogue Heroes - it's a case of truth being stranger than fiction.

Of course there was no AC/DC music at that time, but whoever chose it was inspired as it fitted very well. I speak as a 77-year-old grandmother – and my teenage grandson enjoyed the series, too.

These were extraordinary men seen as mavericks in their time and misfits in an army full of bulls, as my soldier father would have said. We watched the series twice and will watch it again.

...LOATHED IT

War is hell or war is a jolly good jape? Take your pick from the Netflix film All Quiet on the Western Front or the BBC's SAS Rogue Heroes. One is an unflinching account of the horrors of war. The other is a juvenile recruitment drive for the armed forces. I definitely know which one I prefer.

Mark Todman

Rowlands Gill, Tyne and Wear

...I was looking forward to this series, but the constant use of the f-word does nothing to enhance either the script or the drama. It shouldn't be excused under the umbrella of "strong language". Just tell the story.

A DEVIL'S DANCE

The Devil's Hour (Amazon Prime) was exceptionally well acted, particularly by the three principals, Jessica Raine, Peter Capaldi and Nikesh Patel, and as a psychological thriller it was excellent. But it had a disappointing conclusion. There must have been at least ten loose ends and any number of unexplained issues – in particular whether the boy "Isaac" actually existed and who Capaldi's character really was - the Devil, Doctor Who or just someone who could get away with murder? As I feel the writer, Tom Moran, did.

Ray Garrod

A WELL-MANNERED HOST

Well done, Radio 4, on making Alex Forsyth host of Any Questions? (Friday). Measured, informed, with no hectoring of the contestants, it was a pleasure to hear her. Most of all, so far, I have noted only a single interruption, and that was mannerly. She is a worthy successor to her Newscast podcast colleague, the solid Chris Mason. Brian Turnbull Antrim

BALANCE?

If BBC1's Question

Time (Thursday) is to be considered a serious political programme, why does it provide a platform for the climate change denier Julia Hartley-Brewer (27 October)? The BBC might as well wheel out Flat Earthers and Creationists. And if she is invited to take part, at least they ought to have a climate change scientist on the panel to expose her nonsense.

Anna Parsons

MANNERLY

A MUCH-NEEDED LAUGH

During recent months in which we've been inundated with depressing news, I have found two rays of light. Alfie Moore in It's a Fair Cop and Mark Steel in Mark Steel's in Town have made me laugh out loud. Their witty and intelligent observations reflect all that is best in the tradition of British comedy. Just what we need after the news! Thank you, Radio 4.

LOST GEMS UPDATE

What TV and radio treasure have you dug up?

he Radio Times Treasure Hunt for lost gems from our TV and radio past, which we launched in October, has sparked hundreds of responses. Steve Arnold, founder of our partner organisation, the Radio Circle, reports, "Over 80 per cent of what's being offered is radio, so we've been very busy. The range of material is quite remarkable, from pre-war programmes on 78rpm discs to cassette recordings made in the 1990s. Our team of volunteers is carefully checking each item offered against the catalogues to see if it actually is missing."

Keith Wickham, the Radio Circle's restoration expert, is keen to point out that, even if a show is already present in the archives, they are careful not to discard alternative copies too quickly. Quality differences or edits in different recordings mean that a restored show can be made from a dozen or so off-air copies.

Richard Harrison, the Circle's media specialist, says that much of what is were in common use from the mid-50s. "Some of the tapes are unlabelled so we won't know what they contain until they can be played," he adds. "The number of mystery tapes runs into the hundreds so it will take a while to work through them all. But I feel a sense of anticipation every time I lace up a spool on the tape desk: it just might contain TV shows are rarer, a few interesting offers have been made to us. Some are soundtracks of missing programmes (notably the BBC's commentary on the Apollo 11 Moon landing), but we've also been offered items on film, including music performances from the late 60s.

Vol 395

As the mother of two adopted children, I found it quite sad in DNA Journey (4 November ITV) when Alison Steadman appeared distraught on hearing her father was adopted. She expressed what a wonderful man he was and said, "I'm going to accept it."

Why did she not have words to praise his upbringing, which was evidently very loving?

BE REALISTIC!

I think it's about time the tired old series Escape to the Country (Mon–Wed BBC1) moved on from finding country homes for people with mega-budgets to the challenge of finding country homes for people with much less (and more realistic amounts) to spend. Even the smallest budgets of buyers in the series are enormous in terms of property prices further north

WHAT'S THE SCORE?

In previous years when my Strictly WhatsApp group shared our scores, we were quite smug as the judges usually concurred. But this year they're throwing 7s, 8s, 9s and 10s around like confetti! However, on 5 November (BBC1) Craig decided to balance the books by giving Ellie Taylor a ridiculous 3 – choruses of "what?" pingponged across the net.

Our scoring criteria haven't changed, so it must be the judges who have lost the plot.

HARRY REDKNAPP

The football legend knows what it takes to win in the jungle – but can England lift the World Cup?

What's the view from your sofa? I've got lots of pictures on the wall of different people – Bobby Moore, me shaking hands with Pelé, my dad, my boys and my grandkids. Next to me on the sofa is Barney, my bulldog, who kips for most of the day.

Who controls the remote in your house?

Well, this is probably why Sandra and I have been married for 55 years – I'm in one room watching football, cricket, golf, tennis, racing, anything sport. And she's got a TV in the other room where she watches her soaps.

What else do you enjoy on telly?

I love documentaries – like the ones on Netflix about football clubs. I watched an interesting programme about an American footballer called Killer Inside: the Mind of Aaron Hernandez. He's a nutter – it was sad. The twists and turns – oh my God! Also The Last Dance with Michael Jordan was incredible.

The World Cup starts this Sunday – are you excited about it?

I love the World Cup – it's going to be very different this year because of its timing. Every country has had a few injuries because it's right in the middle of the season, but the players should be up and ready to run. I saw the stadium on TV the other day. I know we've had a lot of problems with the workers and everything else that has gone on with it – but it does look amazing.

There's controversy about the tournament being held in Qatar. Should that be overshadowing it?

You can't just brush it under the carpet – but other sporting events are being held in these countries. We've got Saudi owners in the Premier League, we've had world title fights in Saudi Arabia, we've got golf now with the LIV Tour. What can you do? It's there. I think we just need to get on with the football now.

How do you think England will perform?

We've got a big chance with an amazing group of young players in this country at the moment. I'm a bit worried about us defensively – but, attacking, we've got loads of good options. Out of our lads, I'm a big fan of Jude Bellingham who's only 19.

How do you think this World Cup will be remembered?

Hopefully, it's the one that we win. We've had a couple of great opportunities in the last two big tournaments – but it's now time we actually win. With the girls winning the Euros, it would be nice for the guys to do it as well.

Not only is the football on – so is I'm a Celebrity... Get Me Out of Here! What does it take to be crowned King or Queen of the Jungle?

I don't know! I'd never watched the programme before I did it – I didn't have a clue. It's quite tough. Everything you see is how it is. The facilities are dreadful, the food is horrendous, the toilets are disgusting, you get rained on at night – but you do make some great friends.

WHILE I'M WATCHING...

SNACK OF CHOICE
A cup of tea and a chocolate biscuit.
Or a bit of Sandra's cake - she's a great cake-maker.

FAVOURITE WORLD CUP?

In terms of football and excitement, 1970. Brazil was fantastic. England were great. I've got an iconic picture of Bobby and Pelé swapping shirts at the end of a game. There was a mutual respect.

What's your favourite jungle memory?

When Sandra came in. She hadn't been well – she'd had sepsis and recovered – but I'd said if she wasn't well, then I was out of there straightaway. When they told me to leave the camp, it was a shock. I thought something must've happened. When I saw her, I was emotional.

What do you make of this year's line-up?

There are loads of interesting characters. Mike Tindall's a great guy – he'll get on with it because he's as tough as old boots.

Matt Hancock joined the series when lots of people thought he should be at home working for his constituents...

Yeah, I think lots of people did think he should be at home. He was always going to get picked for every trial. People wanted to see him suffer. I suppose lots of politicians have done different reality TV shows like Strictly, so he's not the first, but he's going to get some grief over it, that's for sure. KELLY-ANNE TAYLOR
